"This work has always been highly esteemed for its utility and the variety of valuable illustration which the author has brought together from every accessible source."—Horne's Bibl. Bib., 1839, 398.

"The history is not written in an interesting manner; it is minute on trifling, and brief on important, points. The infidel objection is often strongly stated and weakly answered. The criticisms on passages of Scripture are seldom original or profound. Patrick, Poole, Le Clerc, Heidegger, and [Samuel] Parker's Bibliotheca supply the greater part of the notes. The theological sentiments are neither correct nor consistent; and as a view of the connexion between sacred and profane history it is decidedly inferior to Shuckford and Prideaux. Gleig's edition is certainly more valuable than the former ones; but several of the above remarks are applicable to his additions as well as to the original work."—Orme's Bibl. Bib., 1824, 418.

"The late Dean of Canterbury is excellent, on the whole. His thoughts and reasoning are bright and solid. His style is just, both for the purity of the language and for the strength and beauty of expression."—Dr. Felton.

Stanhope, Lady Hester, the eldest child of Charles, third Earl of Stanhope, (supra,) by his first wife, Lady Hester Pitt, eldest daughter of William, first Earl of Chatham, after the death of her uncle William Pitt, the eminent statesman, with whom she was domesticated, took up her residence first in Wales, and in 1810 in Syria, and there remained until her death, June 23, 1839, aged 63. Her permanent abode was at her villa of D'Joun, on Mount Lebanon, eight miles from Sidon. Her dress was that of an Arabian chieftain, and the Bedouins long regarded her as the Queen of the Wilderness. In her later years she seems to have lost pretty much every thing but her temper,—which was despotic in the highest degree. Let us not fail to add that, in her "better days," her charities were co-extensive with her choler, and were often as injudiciously bestowed. For the details of her romantic life we refer to—1. Stanley, Sir Thomas, of Comberlow, Hertfordshire, the descendant of a natural son (Thomas Stanley) of Edward, Earl of Derby, and the father of the succeeding, with whom he has been confounded by Dr. Birch and others, was the author of some prose and poetical pieces.

Stanley, Thomas, the son of the preceding, and b. at his manor-house called Comberlow, (from the builder, John Comberlow, Esq.,) Hertfordshire, 1625, studied at home under the eye of Edward Fairfax, (p. 575, supra,) by whom he was in 1639 accompanied to Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, where he graduated M.A. in 1641; subsequently took up his residence in the Middle Temple, and divided his time between the practice of the law, the study of philosophy and the classics, and the composition of poetry, and d., in great reputation for learning, benevolence, and integrity, April 12, 1678. 1. Poems and Translations, (from Anacreon, Bion, Moschus, &c.,) Lon., 1647, sm. 8vo; again, 1649, sm. 8vo; with additions, 1651, sm. 8vo; again, 1652, sm. 8vo: Bibl. The whole republished—known as 2d ed.—in 1 vol. fol., 1687; 3d ed., 1700, (some 1701,) fol.; 4th and best ed., with Life of the Author, 1743, 4to. Vols. i., ii., and iii. of the first ed. were trans. into Latin by Godfrey Olearius, who made additions and corrections, and pub. at Leipzig, 1711, 4to. Vol. iv., pub. as a separate work in English, was trans. into Latin by John Le Clerc and pub. at Amsterdam, cum Notis Clerici, 1690, 8vo: he also included it in vol. ii. of his Opera Philosophica. Part of the first edition was pub. in French, at Paris, 1660. This work is biographical,—including no name later than Carneades,—and chiefly taken from Diogenes Laertius. (See Hallam's Lit. Hist., 4th ed., iii. 303.) To those who would make a vast parade of learning at little expense, it is of great utility. See Anderson, Walter, D.D. 3. Psalterium Carolinum, (Charles I.,) Lon., 1660, fol. 4. Æschyli Tragœdiæ VII., Gr. et Lat., cum Scholiis Gr. deperditorum Dramatum Frag. et Commentarii Stanleii, 1663, (some 1664,) fol. Repub. in De Pauw's ed., Hag. Com., 2 vols. 4to; l. p., r. 4to. Stanley's Greek text and Latin version were repub. Glasg., 1746, 2 vols. sm. 8vo; (a reprint from De Pauw's ed., corrected by Porson, appeared Lon., 1806, 2 vols. 8vo, some l. p.;) and his Greek text was repub. Glasg., 1746, 4to; 1795, fol., (corrected by Porson,) 52 on small, 11 or 12 on large, paper: Flaxman's designs are frequently inserted. Stanley's Latin version was repub. 1819, 8vo. Stanley's edition of Æschylus was better than any of its predecessors. Of Stanley's edition the best impression is the following: Tragœdiæ, quæ supersunt deperditarum Fabularum Fragmenta et Scholia Græca, ex Editione Thomæ Stanleii, cum Versione Latine: Accedunt variæ Lectiones et Notæ, V.V., D.D., Criticæ et Philologicæ, quibus suas passim intertexuit Samuel Butler, Cantab., 1809–16, 4 vols. 4to, £8 8*s*.; also in 8 vols. 8vo, £4 4*s*. Vols. i. and ii. of the 8vo edition were reviewed by Bishop Blomfield in Edin. Rev., Oct. 1809, 152–163. This article elicited A Letter to C. J. Blomfield, containing Remarks on the Edinburgh Review of the Cambridge Æschylus, by Samuel Butler, Bishop of St. Asaph, Camb., 1810, 8vo. Blomfield notices this Letter in his review of vol. ii., 4to ed., and vols. iii., iv., 8vo ed., in Edin. Rev., Feb. 1812, 477–508. The student must also read Blomfield's review of this edition in Museum Criticum, ii. 498, and A Letter to the Rev. S. Butler, from the Rev. J. H. Monk, Greek Professor in the University of Cambridge, with Mr. Butler's Reply, 1810, 8vo. See, also, Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., iii. 250. Blomfield first detected and exposed Stanley's plagiarisms from Casaubon, Dorat, and Scaliger. It appears that it is not the "poor" only who "steal,"—as the modest petition of Agur (Proverbs xxx. 9) would lead us to infer. But see a defence of Stanley from the supposed improper use of Casaubon's MS. Notes, in Lon. Quar. Rev., July, 1821, 507. Stanley's MS. Commentaries (in 8 folio vols.) on Æschylus, and other valuable unpublished classical and Biblical papers of the same learned author, are in the Public Library at Cambridge. There are some notes on Demosthenes ascribed to his pen in vol. ix. of Dobson's Oratores Attici, Lon., 1828, 16 vols. 8vo, £9 9*s*.; l. p., imp. 8vo, £13 13*s*.; 25 on largest paper, imp. 8vo, £16 16*s*. "The scene of this narrative
Is on the Sussex coast,—
A sea-side place that now is gay
And doth a season boast.
But, sixty years ago, it was
A village poor and small—
The clergyman and the doctor
The head and chief of all"

"Whatever may be the merits of Mr. Phillipps's and Mr. Serjeant Peake's works, that of Mr. Starkie has the advantage of them both in the rare and most important quality of being easily accessible."—Lon. Law Rev., May, 1849, 201.

The Lon. Jurist (March, 1842; see, also, No. 269) also awards the preference to Starkie over Phillipps and Peake; Professor Anthon (Essay on the Study of the Law) places Starkie above Phillipps; Warren (Law Stu., ed. 1845, 755) considers Starkie's "incomparably the best treatise on the law of evidence hitherto published" in England, but thinks that Greenleaf's treatise (p. 735, supra) "is perhaps still better adapted than that of Mr. Starkie for a first book in this branch of legal science." See, also, TAYLOR, JOHN PITT, (infra.) To the Law Review Mr. Starkie contributed art. iii. in No. 1, (On the Distinction between Questions of Law and Fact;) art. xii. in No. 2, (On the Consolidation of the Criminal Law;) and art. x. in No. 4, (On Trial by Jury.) He also delivered lectures at the Inner Temple: see Warren's Law Stu., 2d ed., 1845, 14; Lon. Law Rev., iii. 75. We should not omit to state that Mr. Starkie was a relative of Sir Humphrey Starkie, Chief Baron of the Exchequer in the reign of Richard III.

Steele, Sir Richard, styled "The first of the British Periodical Essayists," was b. in Dublin, 1671; educated at the Charter-House and Merton College, Oxford, where he was admitted a postmaster in 1691; became an ensign in the Guards, and there led so loose a life that his religious treatise The Christian Hero was written and subsequently published with a view to his own reformation,—which it failed to effect; was appointed Gazetteer by the influence of Addison, (whom he had known at the Charter-House,) who also, as we have already seen, (ADDISON, JOSEPH, pp. 38, 39, supra,) effectually aided him in The Tatler, The Spectator, The Guardian, and The Tender Husband; from 1709 to 1713, when he was chosen M.P. for Stockbridge, Hampshire, was a Commissioner of the Stamp Office; expelled from the House of Commons for passages in The Crisis, and The Englishman, March, 1714; Surveyor of the Royal Stables at Hampton Court, Governor of the Royal Company of Comedians, Justice of the Peace for Middlesex, knighted, M.P. for Boroughbridge, Yorkshire, and a Commissioner of Forfeited Estates in Scotland, all in 1715; in January, 1720, commenced (under the name of Sir John Edgar) The Theatre, which was published every Tuesday and Saturday until April 5 following; January 23, 1720, was greatly distressed by the revocation of his patent as Governor of the Royal Company of Comedians, by which calamity he estimated his losses at nearly £10,000, (see his State of the Case, 1720, and his Epist. Corresp., 469;) in 1721 brought out, with great success, his Comedy of The Conscious Lovers, the dedication of which was acknowledged by the king by a present of £500; spent his last years at his seat at Llangunnor, near Caermarthen, Wales, and there died, of a paralytic disorder, Sept. 1, 1729. According to his own request, his body was privately interred. His first wife was a lady of Barbadoes, with whom he received a plantation; his second wife was the daughter of Jonathan Scurlock, of Llangunnor, Esq., by whom he had one daughter and two sons: the latter both died young; the daughter, Elizabeth Steele, in 1732 became the wife of the Honourable John Trevor, afterwards Baron Trevor of Bromham. Steele was one of the most amiable and one of the most improvident of men. His precepts were far better than his practice; his principles proved no match for his tastes. Often sinning, often repenting, always good-natured, and generally in debt, he multiplied troubles as few men will, and bore them better than most men can.

7. The Guardian, folio, published daily, March 12, 1713–Oct. 1, 1713, 176 numbers: by Steele, 82; Addison, 53; other known contributors, 41, =176. Collected, Lon., 2 vols. in 1, 8vo, 1714, frequently reprinted in 8vo, 12mo, &c., and as above, (No. 6:) see, also, ADDISON, JOSEPH, (pp. 38, 39, supra;) Nos. 8, 9, infra; and Westminster Abbey, or Reminiscences of Past Literature, Jan. 1869.

"Steele will be found in purity and simplicity inferior to Tillotson; to Temple in elegance and harmony; to Dryden in richness, mellowness, and variety. To the two former, however, he is equal in correctness; to the latter in vivacity; and with all he is nearly on a level as to ease and perspicuity. Steele's great misfortune has ever been the comparison, so perpetually drawn with regard to style, between himself and Addison. The proximity of their productions has naturally led to the consideration of their respective merits in point of composition; and though it must be allowed that from the best manner of Addison Steele stands widely apart, yet are there several papers which, having been written by Sir Richard with more than usual care, and with evident marks of emulation, appear to have imbibed a portion of Addisonian grace."—DR. DRAKE: Essays illust. of the Tatler, Spec., and Guardian, 2d ed., 1814, i. 201.

"Steele seems to have gone into his closet chiefly to set down what he observed out of doors. Addison seems to have spent most of his time in his study, and to have spun out and wire-drawn the hints, which he borrowed from Steele or took from nature, to the utmost. I am far from wishing to depreciate Addison's talents, but I am anxious to do justice to Steele, who was, I think, upon the whole, a less artificial and more original writer. The humourous descriptions of Steele resemble loose sketches, or fragments of a comedy; those of Addison are rather comments, or ingenious paraphrases, on the original text."—HAZLITT: Lects. on the English Comic Writers, Lect. "The great, the appropriate praise of Steele is, to have been the first who, after the licentious age of Charles the Second, endeavoured to introduce the Virtues on the stage."—DR. DRAKE: Essays illustrative of the Tatler, &c., 2d ed., 1814, i. 58, (q. v.)

"Steele's Conscious Lovers is the first comedy which can be called moral."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 628, n. See, also, Blackw. Mag., ix. 283.

"The comedies of Steele were the first that were written expressly with a view not to imitate the manners, but to reform the morals, of the age. . . . Nothing can be better meant, or more inefficient. It is almost a misnomer to call them comedies: they are rather homilies in dialogue."—HAZLITT: Lects. on the English Comic Writers, Lect. VIII.

Steevens, George, who has already claimed our notice as a commentator on the greatest of poets, (see SHAKSPEARE, WILLIAM: COLLECTIVE EDITIONS OF SHAKSPEARE'S PLAYS, AND PLAYS AND POEMS, Nos. 15, 25, 26, 32, 33 et seq., and SHAKSPEARIANA, Nos. 210, 213, 226, 259, 270, 275; FARMER, RICHARD, D.D.; MALONE, EDMOND,) was b. at Stepney, 1736; became a scholar of King's College, Cambridge, 1754; spent his latter years in opulent obscurity in Hampstead, and d. there, 1800. He was a contributor to Johnson's Lives of the Poets; Dodsley's Annual Register, (in which see his Frantic Lover;) Isaac Reed's Biog. Dramat.; Sayer's Caricatures; Critical Review; St. James's Chronicle; Public Advertiser, &c.: see, also, FENN, SIR JOHN; HOGARTH, WILLIAM, No. 1. He was a draughtsman as well as a writer. He was sour, splenetic, and untruthful, yet as liberal with his purse as illiberal in his temper. His chief delight was in anonymous attacks (in the Critical Review, and St. James's Chronicle) upon his fellow-littérateurs. He lived in a breeze, and died in a storm. His library, sold by King in 1800, contained 1943 lots, and produced £2740 15*s.*: see Bibliotheca Steevensiana, a Catalogue of the Curious and Valuable Library of George Steevens, Lon., 1800, 8vo; l. p., r. 8vo; largest p., 6 copies, 4to: described in Dibdin's Bibliomania, ed. 1842, 427–40, n.; Clarke's Repert. Bibliog., 543. Notices of this eccentric and accomplished character and of his critical labours will be found in Gent. "George Steevens and Cumberland . . . would have echoed the praises of the men whom they envied, and then have sent to the newspapers anonymous libels upon them."—LORD MACAULAY: Life of Goldsmith, in Encyc. Brit., 8th ed.

"Steevens is a dangerous guide for such as do not look well about them. His errors are specious; for he was a man of ingenuity: but he was often wantonly mischievous, and delighted to stumble for the mere gratification of dragging unsuspicious innocents into the mire with him. He was, in short, the very Puck of commentators."—W. GIFFORD: Lon. Quar. Rev., Dec. 1811, 478.

Knight remarks of the ordinary reading of a passage in Antony and Cleopatra, Act III., Scene XI.,

"the only recommendation of which appears to be that it gives occasion for a note by Steevens, emulating many others that have rendered the variorum edition of Shakspeare one of the filthiest books in our language. If there be a possibility of distorting Shakspere into indelicacy, Steevens, in his own name or under the disguise of Amner or of Collins, never missed the opportunity."—Pictorial Shakspere, 2d ed., 1857, vi. 312, n.

3. Incidents of Travel in Central America, Chiapas, and Yucatan, N. York, 1841, 2 vols. 8vo, (sale in the United States in four months, 12,000 copies;) many edits.; Lon., 1841, 2 vols. 8vo; 1842, 2 vols. 8vo; 1843, 2 vols. 8vo. Revised from the latest American Edition [with a biographical notice of the author] by Frederick Catherwood, 1854, 8vo. The first as well as this last edition was illustrated by Mr. Catherwood; and this gentleman also published Views of Ancient Monuments in Central America, Chiapas, and Yucatan, by Frederick Catherwood, Architect; with Descriptive Letter-press by John L. Stephens, Lon., 1844, imp. fol., 25 plates, £5 5*s.*; mounted and coloured, in a portfolio, £12 12*s.* Catherwood, who was a native of London, in early life spent many years in Egypt as engineer in the service of the Pacha. He perished in the steamer Arctic, on a voyage from Liverpool to New York, Sept. 27, 1854. He also published A Map of Jerusalem from Actual Survey, Phila., 1846. See, also, No. 4, infra.

Mr. Stephens's third work met with a reception as favourable as that accorded to his preceding volumes.

"Let our good friends of the New World send out half a dozen such travellers as Mr. Stephens, and we predict that the records of their wanderings, discoveries, and adventures will do more to elevate the literary character of America than the angry philippics of all the reviews and newspapers throughout the Union, backed though they be by an entire phalanx of servile echoers in England."—*Lon. Sterne, Jacques, LL.D., uncle of Laurence Sterne, (infra,) became Preb. of York, 1729; Preb. of Southwell, 1734; Prec. of York and Archdeacon of Cleveland, 1735; Archdeacon of the East Riding, 1750; Preb. of Durham, 1755; d. 1759. 1. Charge to the Clergy of Cleveland, 1746, York, 1747, 4to. 2. Charge to the Clergy of the East Riding, 1751, 4to, 1752.

Sterne, Laurence, nephew of the preceding, great-grandson of Richard Sterne, Archbishop of York, (infra,) and son of Roger Sterne, a lieutenant in the British army, was b. at Clonmel, Ireland, (where his parents had arrived from Dunkirk only a few days before the event,) November 24, 1713; was placed at school at Halifax, England, 1723; sent by his cousin, Mr. Sterne, of Elvington, to Jesus College, Cambridge, 1733, and took the degree of B.A. 1736, and of M.A. 1740; on leaving the University, received holy orders, and, by the interest of his uncle, Dr. Jacques Sterne, obtained the living of Sutton, Yorkshire, and Jan. 16, 1740–41, a prebend in York Cathedral; was married 1741, and received from a friend of his wife the living of Stillington, also in Yorkshire, and about a mile and a half from Sutton; retained his connection with these two places for nearly twenty years, preaching on Sundays, and reading, "painting, fiddling, and shooting" during the week; published the first two volumes of Tristram Shandy in 1759, and immediately became famous; was presented by Lord Falconbridge with the curacy of Coxwold, Yorkshire, 1760; in the same year took a house at York for his wife and only child, (Lydia,) but from this date appears to have spent the most of his own time either in London or on the Continent; in 1762 went to France, whither he was followed by his wife and daughter, who remained abroad—although Sterne himself returned to England more than once—until the autumn of 1767; d. at his lodgings in Bond Street, London, March 18, 1768. A standing reproach to the profession which he disgraced, grovelling in his tastes, indiscreet, if not licentious, in his habits, he lived unhonoured, and died unlamented, save by those who found amusement in his wit or countenance in his immorality.

1. Sermons: 1. The Case of Elijah and the Widow of Zarephath considered: a charity sermon, 1747; II. The Abuses of Conscience, 1750: an assize sermon: repub. in Tristram Shandy, vol. ii., as a Sermon of Yorick's; III. The Sermons of Mr. Yorick; or, Sermons by Laurence Sterne, A.M., Prebendary of York, and Vicar of Sutton-on-the-Forest and of Stillington near York, Lon., 12mo: vols. i., ii., 1760, (rev. in Month. Rev., May, 1760, 422;) iii., iv., 1766, (rev. in Month. Rev., Mar. 1766, 207;) v., vi., vii., 1769, (rev. in Month. Rev., July, 1769, 77.) Several of these volumes were republished, (1768, 2 vols. 12mo; 1770, 4 vols. 12mo; 1771, 4 vols. 12mo:) the whole seven were republished, 1775, 6 vols. 12mo; 1777, 6 vols.

12mo: 1779, 2 v.ls. 12mo; 1784, 12mo; 1787, 8vo, and in his Works. An Italian version, by Campagnoni, appeared at Milan in 1833.

"'Tristram Shandy' is still a greater object of admiration, the man as well as the book; one is invited to dinner, when he dines, a fortnight before. As to the volumes yet published, [i. and ii.,] there is much good fun in them, and humour sometimes hit and sometimes missed. Have you read his 'Sermons,' with his own comick figure, from a painting by Reynolds, at the head of them? They are in the style I think most proper for the pulpit, and show a strong imagination and a sensible heart; but you see him often tottering on the verge of laughter, and ready to throw his periwig in the face of his audience."—GRAY, the Poet, June 22, 1760: Gray's Letters.

"An excellent writer. His sermons will bear a comparison with any in the English language."—DR. DAVID SCOT: Discourses, 1825, 8vo.

Dr. Ferriar charges Sterne with borrowing from Bishop Hall's Contemplations: see, also, LEIGHTONHOUSE, WALTER, No. 3.

Thomas Jefferson, late President of the United States, was a warm admirer of the Sermons of Mr. Yorick, and of the other productions of the author. See Randall's Life of Jefferson, i. 1858, 26. And see Memoirs of T. Moore, iv., 1853, 79.

2. THE LIFE AND OPINIONS OF TRISTRAM SHANDY, GENT., 12mo: vols. i. and ii., York, 1759, (rev. in Month. Rev., Dec. 1759, 561;) 2d ed., Lon., 1760; vols. iii., iv., 1761, (rev. in Month. Rev., Jan. 1761, 101;) vols. v., vi., 1762, (rev. in Month. Rev., Jan. 1762, 31; see, also, June, 1762, 451;) vols. vii., viii., 1765, (rev. in Month. Rev., Feb. 1765, 120;) vol. ix., 1767, (rev. in Month. Rev., Feb. 1767, 93.) There was a fictitious vol. iii. pub. 1760, 12mo, (see CARR, JOHN, LL.D.,) and, Lowndes says, a fictitious vol. ix. pub. 17—, sm. 8vo. Vols. i.–ix. repub. 1767, 9 vols. sm. 8vo; 1768, 9 vols. sm. 8vo; 1777, 6 vols. large 12mo; 1779, 2 vols. 12mo; 1823, 2 vols. sm. 8vo, (with No. 3, 1823, 2 vols. 12mo; with No. 3 and other novels, 1823, 8vo;) 24mo; 1839, med. 8vo; 1853, r. 8vo; 1856, r. 8vo; 1858, r. 8vo; Phila., 8vo; Bost., 1857, 12mo; in French, Paris, 1829, 12mo.

This work elicited Explanatory Remarks, 1760, &c., 2 vols. 12mo, (see Bohn's Lowndes's, 2510,) and several Shandean pamphlets, (see Month. Rev., 1760, &c.,) and Yorick's Meditations, 1760, 8vo. We have already (FERRIAR, JOHN, M.D., No. 3) referred to the fact that Sterne has been stripped of many of the borrowed plumes which challenged the admiration of his unsuspecting contemporaries Rabelais, Beroalde, Tabarin, Bruscambille, Montaigne, Scarron, Lord Bacon, Donne, Burton, Bouchet, and other authors are freely laid under contribution by this ruthless plunderer of other men's goods. See, also, WAGSTAFFE, CHRISTOPHER. Of Les Serrées of Bouchet Dr. Ferriar remarks,

"I entertain little doubt that from the perusal of this work Sterne conceived the first precise idea of his Tristram Shandy. The most ludicrous and extravagant parts of the book seem to have dwelt upon his mind, and he appears frequently to have recurred to them from memory. This book has now become so extremely scarce that, for a long period, it had escaped all my inquiries, and the most persevering exertions of my friends."—Illustrations of Sterne.

Disraeli suggests (Nichols's Lit. Anec., ix. 632) that Sterne took a hint from the Cock-ramble project of John Dunton.

In April, 1760, shortly after the publication of vols. i. and ii., Horace Walpole tells a correspondent,

"At present nothing is talked of, nothing admired, but what I cannot help calling a very insipid and tedious performance: it is a kind of novel, called 'The Life and Opinions of Tristram Shandy,' the great humour of which consists in the whole narration going backward. It makes one smile two or three times at the beginning, but in recompense makes one yawn for two hours. The characters are tolerably kept up, but the humour is forever attempted and missed."—Letters, ed. 1861, iii. 298. See, also, 332, and vi. 273, 285.

The public thought otherwise; for Sterne received £700 for the second edition of these two volumes and for the copyright of vols. iii. and iv. Gray's opinion we have already cited.

Bishop Warburton, who admired Sterne's genius and strove to restrain its excesses, writes to Hurd, Dec. 27, 1761,

"Sterne has published his fifth and sixth volumes of Tristram. They are wrote pretty much like the first and second; but whether they will restore his reputation as a writer with the public, is another question. The fellow himself is an irrecoverable scoundrel."—Letters from a Late Eminent Prelate, Letter CLIV.

"I pride myself in having warmly recommended 'Tristram Shandy' to all the best company in town, except that at Arthur's."—Bishop Warburton to Garrick, 7th March, 1760.

"If I were requested to name the book of all others which combined wit and humour under their highest appearance of levity with the profoundest wisdom, it would be Tristram Shandy."—LEIGH HUNT: Essay on Wit and Humour.

"To my mind, Uncle Toby is the most perfect specimen of a Christian gentleman that ever existed. Sir Charles Grandison is not to be compared to him. Mr. Shandy, an admirably-drawn character also, is cleverer than Uncle Toby; but 'My Uncle' is the wisest man."—C. R. LESLIE, 1840: Leslie's Autobiog. Recollec., 1860.

"If we consider Sterne's reputation as chiefly founded on Tristram Shandy, he must be regarded as liable to two severe charges,—those, namely, of indecency and affectation. Upon the first accusation Sterne was himself peculiarly sore, and used to justify the licentiousness of his humour by representing it as a mere breach of decorum, which had no perilous consequences to morals. . . . Sterne, however, began and ended by braving the censure of the world in this particular. . . . In like manner, the greatest admirers of Sterne must own that his style is affected, eminently, and in a degree which even his wit and pathos are inadequate to support. The style of Rabelais, which he assumed for his model, is to the highest excess rambling, excursive, and intermingled with the greatest absurdities. But Rabelais was in some measure compelled to adopt this Harlequin's habit, in order that, like licensed jesters, he might, under the cover of his folly, have permission to vent his satire against church and state. Sterne assumed the manner of his master only as a mode of attracting attention and of making the public stare; and therefore his extravagancies, like those of a feigned madman, are cold and forced, even in the midst of his most irregular flights. . . . The style employed by Sterne is fancifully ornamented, but at the same time vigorous and masculine, and full of that animation and force which can only be derived by an acquaintance with the early English prose writers. In the power of approaching and touching the finer feelings of the heart, he has never been excelled, if indeed he has ever been equalled, and may be at once recorded as one of the most affected and one of the most simple of writers,—as one of the greatest plagiarists and one of the most original geniuses whom England has produced."—SIR WALTER SCOTT: Biog. Notice of Eminent Novelists.

See, also, MACKENZIE, HENRY, No. 1, (quotation from Scott,) and conclusion of the article, (quotation from Portfolio of a Man of the World.)

"Voltaire has compared the merits of Rabelais and Sterne as satirists of the abuse of learning, and I think has done neither of them justice. This great distinction is obvious: that Rabelais derided absurdities then existing in full force, and intermingled much sterling sense with the grossest parts of his book; Sterne, on the contrary, laughs at many exploded opinions and forsaken fooleries, and contrives to degrade some of his most solemn passages by a vicious levity. Rabelais flew a higher pitch, too, than Sterne. Great part of the voyage to the Pays de Lanternois, which so severely stigmatizes the vices of the Romish clergy of that age, was performed in more hazard of fire than water."—DR. FERRIAR: Illust. of Sterne.

3. A SENTIMENTAL JOURNEY THROUGH FRANCE AND ITALY, BY MR. YORICK, Lon., 1768, 2 vols. 12mo; l. p., 8vo; 1778, 2 vols. 12mo; 1792, (with six plates after Stothard,) 8vo; l. p., r. 8vo, (with proof plates;) with Yorick's Letters to Eliza, Paris, 1800, 18mo; two copies on vellum, (Junot, 17, £4 5*s.*;) again, 1802, 12mo, (and 18mo;) three copies on pink paper, and one copy on vellum; 12mo, 18mo, 24mo; with 100 wood-cuts, 1839, 8vo, and 1841, 8vo; with designs by Jacqué and Fussell, 8vo; with Illust. by Tony Johannot, 1851, 8vo, (and N. "Sterne has published two little volumes, called 'Sentimental Travels.' They are very pleasing, though too much dilated, and infinitely preferable to his tiresome 'Tristram Shandy,' of which I never could get through three volumes. In these there is great good-nature, and strokes of delicacy."—Horace Walpole to G. Montagu, Mar. 12, 1768: Letters, ed. 1861, v. 91.

Sterne predicted that his Sentimental Journey would please the multitude, especially the women,—"who," says he, "will read this book in the parlour, and Tristram in the bed-chamber."

4. LETTERS: I. Letters of the Late Rev. Laurence Sterne to his Most Intimate Friends; with a Fragment in the Manner of Rabelais: to which are Prefixed Memoirs of his Life and Family, written by Himself, Lon., 1775, (some 1776,) 3 vols. 12mo. Pub. by his daughter, Lydia Sterne de Medalle. II. Letters from Yorick to Eliza, (Mrs. Elizabeth Draper,) 1775, (some 1776,) 12mo; Phila., 1775, 12mo. These were followed by Sterne's Letters to his Friends, and Eliza's letters to him, Lon., 1775, 12mo; Letters supposed to have been written by

Yorick and Eliza, 1779, 2 vols. 12mo. III. Sterne's Letters to his Friends on Various Occasions: to which is added his History of a Watch-Coat, [pub. separately about 1768;] with Explanatory Notes, 1775, 12mo. See, also, Original Letters of the Late Rev. Laurence Sterne; never before published, 1788, cr. 8vo, pp. 216. The Monthly Review (March, 1789, 271) was not satisfied of the genuineness of these Letters, but considered them "not unworthy of that hitherto unrivalled genius, . . . with none of those errors with which several of Sterne's works are justly chargeable."

IV. Seven Letters written by Sterne and his Friends, hitherto unpublished; Edited by W. Durrant Cooper, F.S.A., 1844. Privately printed. We must not omit to notice The Posthumous Works of a Late Celebrated Genius, deceased, 1770, 2 vols. 12mo.

"Manifestly spurious. . . . They allude to many facts and circumstances which did not happen till Sterne was dead," &c. —Month. Rev., May, 1770, 360.

There have also been published: Fragments in the Manner of Sterne, 1797, 12mo; Gleanings from the Works of Laurence Sterne, comprising Tales, Sermons, Letters, &c., 1798, sm. 12mo; Beauties of Sterne, 24mo and 12mo. We proceed to notice:

COLLECTIVE EDITIONS OF STERNE'S WORKS, containing Tristram Shandy, A Sentimental Journey, Sermons, Letters, A Fragment, and The History of a Good Warm Watch-Coat; prefaced by Memoirs, &c. by Sterne. Some of the old editions (those of 1780, 1783, 1788, 1803, 1819, and perhaps others) are illustrated by plates from Stothard, &c.; Lon., 1780, 10 vols. cr. 8vo, (called best edition;) Dubl., 1780, 7 vols. 12mo; (incomplete edition, Phila., 1774, 5 vols. 12mo; made-up set, Lon., 1775, 17 vols. 12mo;) Lon., 1783, 10 vols. sm. 8vo; 1784, 8 vols. 12mo; 1788, 10 vols. cr. 8vo; 1790, 8 vols. 12mo; 1793, 10 vols. 12mo; 1793, 5 vols. 12mo; 1794, 8 vols. 12mo; 1802, 10 vols. 12mo; 1803, 4 vols. 8vo; l. p., r. 8vo; 1803, 8 vols. sm. 8vo; 1808, 4 vols. 8vo; N. York, 1813, 6 vols. 12mo; Lon., 1815, 4 vols. 12mo; 1819, 4 vols. 8vo; 1833, 6 vols. 18mo; 1839, 8vo; 1847, 8vo; 1849, r. 8vo; 1853, 8vo; 1854, 8vo; with a Life by Himself, 1868, p. 8vo; Globe edition, 1869, 2 vols. in 1, 12mo, pp. 1116; Phila., 8vo; Bost., 8vo; 1857, 2 vols. 12mo. In French, Paris, 1803, 3 vols. 8vo; avec des notices biographiques et littéraires par Sir W. Scott; traduites par F. Michel, 1838, 8vo.

We quote a few sad lines from a work recently published:

"The celebrated writer Sterne, after being long the idol of this town, died in a mean lodging, without a single friend who felt interest in his fate, except Becket, his bookseller, who was the only person who attended his interment. [There was one other person, probably Mr. James, in the carriage.] He was buried in a graveyard near Tyburn, belonging to the parish of Marylebone, and the corpse, being marked by some of the resurrection men, (as they are called,) was taken up soon afterwards, and carried to an anatomy professor of Cambridge. A gentleman who was present at the dissection told me [Malone] he recognised Sterne's face the moment he saw the body."—Sir James Prior's Life of Edmond Malone, 1860, 8vo.

We are unwilling to conclude without the citation of a few more opinions on this still favourite author:

"His style is . . . at times the most rapid, the most happy, the most idiomatic, of any that is to be found. It is the pure essence of English conversational style. His works consist only of *mo*ceaux,—of brilliant passages. I wonder that Goldsmith, who ought to have known better, should call him 'a dull fellow.' His wit is poignant, though artificial; and his characters (though the groundwork of some of them had been laid before) have yet invaluable original differences; and the spirit of the execution, the master-strokes constantly thrown into them, are not to be surpassed. It is sufficient to name them:—Yorick, Dr. Slop, Mr. Shandy, My Uncle Toby, Trim, Susanna, and the Widow Wadman. In these he has contrived to oppose, with equal felicity and originality, two characters, one of pure intellect and the other of pure good nature, in My Father and My Uncle Toby. There appears to have been in Sterne a vein of dry, sarcastic humour, and of extreme tenderness of feeling; the latter sometimes carried to affectation, as in the tale of Maria, and the apostrophe to the recording angel, but at other times pure and without blemish. The story of Le Fevre is perhaps the finest in the English language. My Father's restlessness, both of body and mind, is inimitable. It is the model from which all those despicable performances against modern philosophy ought to have been copied, if their authors had known any thing of the subject they were writing about. My Uncle Toby is one of the finest compliments ever paid to human nature. He is the most unoffending of God's creatures; or, as the French express it, un tel petit bon homme. Of his bowling green, his sieges, and his amours, who would say or think any thing amiss?"—HAZLITT: Lects. on the English Comic Writers, Lect. VI.: (On the English Novelists.)

As Hazlitt contrasts Sterne with Richardson, so does the author next to be cited contrast Sterne with Mackenzie, (q. v., quotation from Sir Walter Scott.)

"We think that, on the whole, Mackenzie is the first master of this delicious style. Sterne, doubtless, has deeper touches of humanity in some of his works. But there is no sustained feeling,—no continuity of emotion,—no extended range of thought, over which the mind can brood,—in his ingenious and fantastical writings. His spirit is far too mercurial and airy to suffer him tenderly to linger over those images of sweet humanity which he discloses. His cleverness breaks the charm which his feeling spreads, as by magic, around us. His exquisite sensibility is ever counteracted by his perception of the ludicrous and his ambition after the strange. No harmonious feeling breathes from any of his pieces. He sweeps 'that curious instrument, the human heart,' with hurried fingers, calling forth in rapid succession its deepest and its liveliest notes, and making only marvellous discord. His pathos is, indeed, most genuine while it lasts; but the soul is not suffered to cherish the feeling which it awakens," &c.—SIR T. NOON TALFOURD: New Month. Mag.; and in his Crit. and Miscell. Writings.

"Sterne, though he could not equal Fielding in fluent wit, is a paragon of lucky quaintness, and in pathos is approached by Mackenzie alone."—SIR D. K. SANDFORD: The Rise and Progress of Lit.

The last eminent commentator on Sterne is well known to be one of the most unsparing of his critics:

"He fatigues me with his perpetual disquiet, and his uneasy appeals to my risible or sentimental faculties. He is always looking in my face, watching his effect, uncertain whether I think him an impostor or not; posture-making, coaxing, and imploring me. 'See what sensibility I have—own now that I am very clever—do cry, now; you can't resist this!' The humour of Swift and Rabelais, whom he pretended to succeed, poured from them as naturally as song does from a bird; they lose no manly dignity with it, but laugh their hearty great laugh out of their broad chests as nature bade them. But this man—who can make you laugh, who can make you cry too—never lets his reader alone, or will permit his audience repose: when you are quiet, he fancies he must rouse you, and turns over head and heels, or sidles up and whispers a nasty story. The man is a great jester, not a great humourist. He goes to work systematically and of cold blood, paints his face, puts on his ruff and motley clothes, and lays down his carpet and tumbles on it."—THACKERAY: The English Humourists of the Eighteenth Century, Lect. VI.; and see his Lecture on Charity and Humour, his Roundabout Papers, Dec. 1862, cr. 8vo, and Lon. Athen., 1862, ii. 739.

Sterne, Richard, D.D., great-grandfather of the preceding, was b. at Mansfield, Nottinghamshire, 1596; admitted of Trinity College, Cambridge, 1611; removed to Bene't College, 1620; elected Fellow, 1623; President of Bene't College, 1632; Master of Jesus College, 1633; ejected, 1644, and restored, 1660; Rector of Yeovilton, Somerset, 1634; Rector of Harleton, Cambridgeshire, 1642; imprisoned, and subsequently taught school, during the Commonwealth; Bishop of Carlisle, 1660; Archbishop of York, 1664; d. 1683. I. Commentary on Psalm ciii., Lon., 1649, 8vo. 2. Summa Logicæ ex optimis Auctoribus collecta, 1685, 8vo. Anon. He published a number of Latin verses, assisted in the publication of Walton's Biblia Sacra Polyglotta, 1657, 6 vols. fol., and is one of those to whom the Whole Duty of Man has been ascribed. Sternhold, Thomas, a native, according to Wood, of Hampshire, according to Holinshed, of Southampton, according to Atkins, of Gloucestershire, was educated at Oxford, subsequently became Groom to the Robes to Henry VIII. and Edward VI., and d. August, 1549. This good man's "righteous soul was grieved from day to day" by what he saw and heard around him:

"Being a most zealous reformer, and a very strict liver, he became so scandaliz'd at the amorous and obscene songs used in the court, that he forsooth turn'd into English metre 51 of David's Psalms, and caused musical notes to be set to them, thinking thereby that the courtiers would sing them instead of their sonnets, but did not, only some few excepted."—WOOD: *Athen. Black letter; the music (adaptations from the German and French in many instances) consisting of the melodies only, without base or other part. See HOPKINS, JOHN, and to the authorities there cited add: Bohn's Lowndes's Bibl. Man., Part 7, 1861, 1994; Holland's Brit. Psalmists, i. 91; Observs. upon the Met. Vers. of the Psalms, &c., by Rev. "The chief merit of this version consists in preserving the expressions of the prose."—Dr. TOWNLEY.

"Sternhold and Hopkins are, in general, bad, but have given us a few stanzas that are wonderfully fine."—DR. BEATTIE. See, also, BRADY, NICHOLAS.

"Then flourished Sternhold and Hopkins, who, with the best intentions and the worst taste, degraded the spirit of Hebrew Psalmody by flat and homely phraseology, and, mistaking vulgarity for simplicity, turned into bathos what they found sublime."—CAMPBELL: Spec. of Eng. Poetry, i.: (Essay on Eng. Poetry.)

"I read to them the passage in Bishop Horsley's Preface to the Psalms, where he calls Sternhold and Hopkins's an excellent translation, and denounces any one who dares to attempt a better. The beautiful parts of the Psalms are much better in their present form than they would be in any metrical version."—THOMAS MOORE: Memoirs, ii., 1853, 17.

"The first verse which I read was Pope's Pastorals; and the first criticism I recollect was an observation which I repeated after my aunts, on the great superiority of Tate and Brady's Psalms over Sternhold and Hopkins's version. I then spoke with the confidence of youth. I think it very likely that if I were to re-examine the question I might now think it more doubtful."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH: Life, i. ch. i.

"The metrical version of the Psalms, by Sternhold and Hopkins, first printed in 1562, was essentially for the people; and, accustomed as we have been to smile at the occasional want of refinement in this translation, its manly vigour, ay, and its bold harmony, may put to shame many of the feebler productions of later times."—CHARLES KNIGHT: William Shakspere: a Biography: Pictorial Shakspere, 2d ed., 1867, viii. 43.

> "Not but there are who merit other palms;
> Hopkins and Sternhold glad the heart with psalms;
> The boys and girls whom charity maintains
> Implore your help in these pathetic strains:
> How could devotion touch the country pews
> Unless the gods bestowed a proper muse?"

1770, 3 vols. 8vo. Miller & Cadell paid £500 for the copyright. It was reviewed at length by the Monthly Review for April, (279,) May, (365,) and June, (464,) 1767, and pronounced by that authority (May, 365) "an excellent and masterly performance." It was "the most extensive and most valuable" of the treatises on political economy which had then appeared, (Lord Brougham: Philos. Time Geo. III., ed. 1855, 263;) but,

"being written before the speculations of Smith in this country and the Economists in France, contains, on most of the subjects described, as different a view of the science from that now universally received, as if it were written upon another branch of learning."—Lord Brougham: *Polit. 4. Stevens's American Bibliographer, Nos. 1 and 2, for January and February, 1854, 8vo, pp. 96; with Illustrations, C. Whittingham. 100 copies, of which 15 or 16 were sold. The plan was abandoned for No. 10, infra.

5. Catalogue Raisonné of English Bibles, New Testaments, Psalms, and other Parts of the Holy Scriptures, from the Earliest Editions to the Year 1850, C. Whittingham, 1855, p. 8vo, pp. 400.

"Between the years 1847 and 1857 above £30,000 worth of Bibles, in all languages, were collected, collated, and passed into the libraries of Mr. Lenox, Mr. George Livermore, Mr. Fry, the British Museum, the Bodleian, &c. In order to reduce his labours to the greatest degree of precision, he had about 400 pages put up in very small clear type, uniform with the Nuggets, with most careful collations of each work. It was only in this way that he could identify and describe the various editions and ascertain their history. Not being satisfied with the work, only a few uncorrected proofs were taken, to serve as copy for a larger and better work."—HENRY STEVENS.

6. An Analytical Index to the Colonial Documents of New Jersey in the State Paper Offices of England; Compiled by Henry Stevens; Edited, with Notes and References to Printed Books and Manuscripts in other Depositories, by William A. Whitehead, N. York; Published for the New Jersey Historical Society, 1858, 8vo, pp. xxx., 504.

"Ably and thoroughly edited."—(N. York) Hist. Mag., Oct. 1858, 316.

"For several years the historical students had been trying to prevail upon the Legislature of New Jersey to follow the example of N. York and procure historical Documents from Europe; but, all attempts failing, in 1849 Mr. Stevens's services were secured by his friend the Hon. James G. King. For nearly two years this laborious work was on the anvil. The rest of the story is told by Mr. Whitehead in his Preface, pp. xxii.–xxiii."

Mr. Stevens having industriously prosecuted his researches, the committee charged with the administration of the fund provided for the procurement of the Index had the pleasure, on the 11th of September, 1851, of exhibiting to the Society nine quarto cases, covered with blue morocco, and having locks and keys, containing over eighteen hundred separate cards, each containing an abstract of some paper relating to New Jersey, beautifully engrossed, the cards being arranged chronologically, and each case having the first and last date lettered on the back, the whole forming a manuscript work of great value and unique appearance.

It was, therefore, with great cordiality and unanimity that the following resolution was passed by the Society:

"Resolved, That the thanks of the New Jersey Historical Society be presented to Henry Stevens, Esq., now in London, for his discrimination, good judgment, and fidelity in the selection and arrangement of his Index of the Colonial Documents of New Jersey, and that a copy of this resolution, duly authenticated, be transmitted to him by the Society."

7. Stevens's Collection of Historical Papers relating to Rhode Island: Selected, Transcribed, and Arranged by him chiefly from the State Paper Offices in London, 1640–1775, 6 vols. fol., bound in morocco. Made for and deposited in the library of John Carter Brown, of Providence. 8. Stevens's Historical Index of the Colonial Documents relating to Maryland in her Majesty's State Paper Office of England, 10 vols. 4to. Now preserved in the Library of the Maryland Historical Society: a present to that institution from Mr. Peabody. It was compiled by Mr. Stevens on his own responsibility, and sold to Mr. Peabody at £100; considerably less than cost. 9. Stevens's Historical Index of Documents relating to Virginia, from 1585 to 1775, preserved in the State Paper Office of London. On 2000 cards, chronologically arranged. Deposited by exchange in the Virginia State Library in 1858. This valuable Index was never completed and engrossed. 10. Historical Nuggets: Bibliotheca Americana; or, A Descriptive Account of My Collection of Rare Books relating to America, Whittingham, 18mo, vols. i., ii., pp. 805, 1858, (also 1862.) See No. 4.

"This work, printed in the best style of the Chiswick Press, regardless of time, comprises 3000 Titles given in full, with the collation and price of each work. It was intended, as far as it went, to be a manual for collectors of this expensive class of books. But it did not go very far, containing as it does not a selection, but only such books as the author happened to possess at that time. It was intended to supply the deficiencies by additional volumes; but these have never appeared, and probably never will in this form.

"'The following, from a New England bookseller settled in London, is printed with remarkable accuracy: Historical Nuggets,' &c.—Harrisse, p. xli.

"'A great portion of this valuable work was destroyed by fire in New York in 1864.'—Morrell's Catalogue, Jan. 1869, p. 124.

"A similar remark has appeared in other catalogues; but, on inquiry, it is found that when Mr. Richardson's fire occurred, the Nuggets, of which a few copies had been consigned to him, were not injured."—HENRY STEVENS.

11. A Catalogue of American Books in the Library of the British Museum, Christmas, 1856, Lon., 1859, (some 1862,) 8vo, about 650 pp. See No. 14. 12. A Catalogue of Mexican and other Spanish American and West India Books in the Library of the British Museum, Christmas, 1856, C. Whittingham, 1859, (some 1862,) 8vo, pp. 64. See No. 14. 13. A Catalogue of Canadian and other British North American Books in the Library of the British Museum, Christmas, 1856, C. Whittingham, 1859, (some 1862,) 8vo, pp. 16. See No. 14. 14. A Catalogue of American Maps in the Library of the British Museum, Christmas, 1856, C. Whittingham, 1859, (some 1862,) 8vo, pp. 16. These four Catalogues, (Nos. 11–14,) bound in 2 volumes, comprising about 750 large 8vo pages in double columns, similar to the Bibliotheca Grenvilliana, describing about 20,000 volumes, under about 14,000 full titles, are printed by Whittingham on fine toned paper in the best style of the Chiswick Press. 15. Catalogue of a Collection of Singularly Interesting, Fine, and Rare Books, in which is included the Greater Portion of the Very Important Library of the Late Edward A. Crowninshield, Esq., of Boston: Sold by Auction by Messrs. Puttick & Simpson in July, 1860, 1860, 8vo, pp. 180; 1893 and 250 lots.

"Mr. Stevens, having purchased Mr. Crowninshield's library for about $10,000, had it withdrawn from sale in Boston and shipped to England. He then withdrew from the collection the Bay Psalms, the first book printed in New England, 1640, and most of the other bibliographical rarities, the great attraction of the library to him. He then combined the rest with the remainders of two other fine libraries he had recently purchased, flavouring the whole with many choice lots from his own stock, such as Hulsius, De Bry, Bibles, &c., and so compounded this remarkable collection. Lot No. 912, Hulsius, a very fine set which he had taken infinite pains to make up, the 26 Parts all first editions, save one, brought the unprecedented price of £335. The Crowninshield copy of Smith's Virginia and True Travels, 2 vols in 1, Lon., 1627–30, with the original portraits of the Duchess of Richmond, and Pocahontas, brought about £30, and went to Dr. Barney, of Richmond. The same copy produced $247.50 at auction in New York, Jan. 19, 1870."—HENRY STEVENS.

16. Bibliotheca Americana: a Catalogue of Books relating to the History and Literature of America: Sold by Messrs. Puttick & Simpson, Auctioneers, March, 1861; 1861, r. 8vo, fine paper, pp. 273: lots 2415.

"This catalogue, chiefly abridged from the Nuggets, is one of the most carefully-made auction catalogues ever issued in London. The collations are given of every book, so that the volume is now of considerable value as a book of reference. Two hundred and fifty copies were printed on large paper and bound in cloth, and not offered for sale till after the auction was over."

17. The Tehuantepec Railway, its Location and Advantages under the LaSere Grant of 1869, New York, D. Appleton & Co., 1869, 8vo. Less than 50 copies on sale.

"Of this book one may read in the Historical Magazine for Aug. 1869, p. 106: 'This curiously-constructed volume opens with an Introduction [by Simon Stevens, President of the Tehuantepec Railway Company] in which the character of the LaSere Grant [of 1869] for a right of way from ocean to ocean is carefully described'; with copies of the Charters granted by Mexico and Vermont; and specifications of the proposed work. Then follow, what possess most interest to us,—Historical and Geographical Notes, 1453–1869, the former by Henry Stevens, the widely-known Bibliopole of London; the latter by some unknown hand. The whole is elaborately illustrated with maps and engravings; and, typographically considered, it is a volume of great beauty. In his Historical Notes, Mr. Henry Stevens has briefly glanced on the Old World as it was four hundred years ago'—and traced the progress of discovery and exploration down to 1530, especially so far as it pertained to the New World and its development and gradual recognition as an independent hemisphere. He treats of the earliest maps, the mistakes of the navigators, the blunders of the geographers, &c., &c., and endeavours to show, for the first time on record, that the coast-line originally laid down as the northeastern coast of Asia was afterwards adopted as the eastern coast of North America. The effect of this discovery, if maintained, must considerably modify our previously-conceived notions as to our early geography, chronology, and history. The above-named article concludes with:—'Such a paper, sandwiched in a prospectus for a new railway, is as unusual as it is judicious. The volume which contains it will be sought for and perused by hundreds who would not otherwise have cared for it; and it will be advertised and talked of . . . as no other similar production has hitherto been. For that reason, let us advise our readers who are interested in such inquiries to seek to obtain a copy.'"

18. Historical and Geographical Notes, 1459–1869, New York, D. Appleton & Co., 1869, 8vo.

"The edition of this book of 40 pages was limited to 100 copies struck off separately for private distribution. It was seen through the press with some difficulty, and there are in it many typographical errors, and some ill-considered statements, so that the whole issue still slumbers in its original package. Some few of the mistakes are alluded to in the end in the sentence beginning, 'Let him that is not without errata in his own life correct neatly with his pen, and pardon these of mine,' &c."—HENRY STEVENS.

19. Historical and Geographical Notes on the Earliest Discoveries in America, 1453–1530. With Comments on the Earliest Charts and Maps; the Mistakes of the Early Navigators, and the Blunders of the Geographers; the Asiatic Origin of the Atlantic Coast-Line of North America, how it crept in and how it crept out of the Maps. The whole illustrated by the Tehuantepec Railway Company's Map of the World on Mercator's projection, and photo-lithographic fac-similes of many of the earliest maps and charts of America; with frontispiece and six large sheets of maps; cloth, uncut, 54 pp. royal 8vo, New Haven: office of the American Journal of Science. London: office of the Author, 4 Trafalgar Square, 1869.

Only 75 copies printed for sale, all alike, on Whatman's best hand-made paper, illustrated with one new map of the world, and fac-similes of 16 of the very earliest known maps of America, arranged on five large sheets of bond-paper. Net published price, $10.

"This book is the leading article in the American Journal of Science for Nov. 1869, considerably enlarged and amended, especially in reference to the voyages of the Cabots, and with the addition of several maps. The work ends on the 54th page with

"CONCLUSION.

"'All these things, disjointed and crammed as they are in this little book, to the indifferent reader will no doubt seem very simple, insomuch that some will think that they have known them all along. But, simple as they are, if credited and adopted, they will require a careful revision of our whole course of study in early American geography and history.'"—HENRY STEVENS.

20. The Humboldt Library: a Catalogue of the Library of Alexander Von Humboldt, with a Bibliographical and Biographical Memoir, (and portrait,) Lon., 1870, r. 8vo, pp. xxxii., 791. This excellent Catalogue was prepared under the superintendence of Henry Stevens by John Bohn, for Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge, with a view of selling the library by auction; but owing to the great fire in June, 1865, in which a large portion of the library was burnt, the Catalogue was not finished and published until 1870. Extracts from Mr. Stevens's Introduction will be found in an article from his pen on Humboldt in Silliman's Amer. Jour. of Sci. and Arts, Jan. 1870.

21. Bibliotheca Historica; or, A Catalogue of 5000 Volumes of Books and Manuscripts relating chiefly to the History and Literature of North and South America, among which is included the Larger Proportion of the Extraordinary Library of the Late Henry Stevens, Sr., of Barnet, Vt., Founder and First President of the Vermont Historical and Antiquarian Society. The whole comprising such a collection of ancient and modern books, rich and rare, useful and common, as seldom occurs for sale in any country, including many titles never before recorded in an American Catalogue. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by Henry Stevens, G.M.B., F.S.A., etc., sometimes Student in Yale College, now residing in London at 4 Trafalgar Square. To be sold by auction, by Messrs. Leonard & Co., at their Library Sales-Room, No. 48 Broomfield Street, in Boston, on Tuesday the 22d, Wednesday the 23d, Thursday the 24th, and Friday the 25th day of March, 1870. Sale each day to commence at 10 in the forenoon and 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Boston: H. O. Houghton & Co., Cambridge: Riverside Press, 1870.

"This beautifully-printed volume of 256 pages is designed not merely as an auction catalogue, but a kind of pious monument erected by the author in honor of his late father. In some respects it is one of the most elaborate auction catalogues ever issued either in this country or Europe. The notes are peculiar, and are generally applied to such books as are not usually so treated, while the well-known rare books have no comments, but stand on their known merits. This must be a catalogue to be sought for long after the books are dispersed."—Henry Stevens.

Mr. Stevens issued in 1848 a prospectus of Bibliographia Americana: a Bibliographical Account of the Sources of Early American History, (see Trübner's Bibl. Guide to Amer. Lit., ed. 1859, iv., N. Amer. Rev., July, 1850, 205, by George Livermore, Jan. 1861, 147, by A. P. Peabody;) but this has not yet (May, 1870) made its appearance. In 1857 he edited Franklin's Dissertation on Liberty and Necessity, Pleasure and Pain, Lon., 1725, 8vo; with an Introduction by Henry Stevens: Carefully Reprinted in Fac-Simile by Whittingham, 8vo: 20 copies, (see Franklin, Benjamin, LL.D., p. 630, supra;) and in July 25, 1862, issued No. 1 of My Informant: Containing a List of the Principal English, French, and German Periodicals and Transactions, with the Prices to the Public and the Trade: Together with a List of above 200 Works for Sale, chiefly relating to America: Whittingham. He has also contributed to periodicals. We need hardly add that the collector of early American books and books relating to America should not be satisfied whilst he lacks any one of Mr. Stevens's publications.

"Works relating to the history of America, in which the Library is now [1868] very rich, began in this year [1847] to form a specially noticeable feature in the catalogue of purchases. Many rare tracts had been of old in the Library; but much of the completeness of the present collection is due to the energy of the well-known American bibliophilist, Henry Stevens, Esq." —*W. D. Stevenson, Sir John Andrew, Mus. Doc., a Choral Vicar of Dublin Cathedral, son of a professor of music, was b. in Dublin, 1761, knighted, 1802, and d. Sept. 14, 1833.

"From the year 1802 to 1816 Sir John Stevenson was constantly engaged in the formation of musical publications, in conjunction with his friend Mr. Moore. Their Irish Melodies were published in eight [nine] parts. Another work was a collection of popular national airs; and a third, a series of sacred songs, duets, and trios. Their success was complete. In 1822 Sir John Stevenson published two numbers of Psalms, the poetical parts having been written by his son-in-law, Mr. Dalton; and a few years after he collected his Cathedral Anthems, and published them in London, in two volumes. One of the last and greatest of his productions was his Oratorio of the Thanksgiving, which has often been performed at the Dublin cathedrals."—Lon. Gent. Mag., 1833, ii. 542, (Obituary,) q. v.

This vol. was republished 1764, sm. 8vo; 1785, sm. 8vo. In 1760 Stevenson had printed anonymously two "wicked and nonsensical poems," (To My Cousin Shandy on his Coming to Town, &c.,) which Gray called "absolute madness," and of which Bishop Warburton remarks, "Whoever was the author, he appears to be a monster of impiety and lewdness." See Warburton's Letters; Walpole's Letters; Lon. Quar. Rev., April, 1854: Sterne. After Stevenson's death was published a collection of his Works: containing Crazy Tales, Fables for Grown Gentlemen, Lyric Epistles, Pastoral Cordial, Pastoral Puke, Macarony Fables, Monkish Epitaphs, &c., 1793–95, 3 vols. sm. 8vo. Stewart, Dugald, the son of Matthew Stewart, D.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Edinburgh, (infra,) was b. in the College of Edinburgh, November 22, 1753, and pursued his studies at this institution with great distinction; in 1772 commenced lecturing from his father's desk, in 1774 was appointed his assistant, and on his death, in 1785, was elected his successor; in the same year succeeded Dr. Adam Ferguson (whose duties he had discharged during the session of 1778–79) in the chair of Moral Philosophy; in 1810 relinquished the active duties of the professorship to his colleague, (see Brown, Thomas, M.D.,) and retired to Kinneil House, on the banks of the Firth of Forth, about twenty miles from Edinburgh, "where he spent the remainder of his days in philosophical retirement." His death occurred on the 11th of June, 1828, at No. 5, Ainslie Place, Edinburgh, where he had been for a few days on a visit. He was buried in the Canongate churchyard, and a monument was erected to his memory on the southwest shoulder of the Calton Hill, near the Observatory. From the year 1806 until his death, he enjoyed the sinecure office (created for his benefit) of Gazette-Writer for Scotland,—salary £600 per annum. This descended to his family. He was married first in 1783 to Helen Bannatyne, who died in 1787; secondly, in 1790, to Helen D'Arcy Cranstoun, who, with a son (Lieutenant-Colonel Matthew Stewart, infra) and a daughter, survived him.

In his 19th year he composed and read before a literary association the admired Essay on Dreaming, subsequently incorporated in vol. i. of No. 1. His publications are as follows:

1. Elements of the Philosophy of the Human Mind. Vol. i., Edin. and Lon., 1792, 4to, (rev. in Lon. Month. Rev., 1793, i. 59, 203, 366;) Phila., 1793, 8vo. In French, by M. G. N. Wright, Lon., 1843, 8vo; 1850, 8vo; 1852, 8vo; 1853, 8vo; 1859, 8vo; 1862, 8vo; vol. iii., with Addits. to vol. i., Edin. and Lon., 1827, 4to, (rev. in Lon. Month. Rev., 1827, i. 265, 389.) Necessary to complete the editions both in quarto and octavo, in which latter size it has never been printed save in the two collective editions of the author's works.

"One of the most decisive proofs that he was perfectly qualified to unite precision with ease, to be brief with the utmost clearness, and to write with becoming elegance in a style where the meaning is not overloaded with ornaments. "He will be disappointed who shall expect from these pages an account of the progress of Dr. Robertson's mental character, farther than can be obtained in his works. We meet neither with striking anecdotes, nor discriminating touches, nor fine and descriptive sketches. We recognize in every part of the piece a great master's hand; but the painting is not historical —it is not a portrait."—DR. THOMAS BROWN: Edin. Rev., April, 1803, 229–249.

"I read Stewart's Life of Robertson, which is a very elegant and agreeable production, and contains one or two passages executed in Stewart's happiest manner. Upon the whole, I do not think him successful in biographical composition. His conceptions of character, though formed with comprehensive design, want that individuality to which the painter of portraits must descend. His genius for writing belongs to a higher class; but it is confined to that. He is not qualified to be the first of an inferior class."—FRANCIS HORNER: Memoirs and Corresp., (q. v.)

"This criticism we think to be just. In his Life of Adam Smith, Stewart omitted many anecdotes relating to Smith's habits and manners which would have given life and reality to his narrative and fulness and finish to his portrait."—Lon. Gent. Mag., 1843, ii. 14, n.

See MACKINTOSH, RT. HON. SIR JAMES, (p. 1180;) NAPIER, MACVEY, (p. 1399.)

"It will be difficult to name a work," remarks Mackintosh, in his review of Part 1, "in which so much refined philosophy is joined with so fine a fancy, and so much elegant literature with such a delicate perception of the distinguishing excellences of great writers, and with an estimate in general so just of the services rendered to knowledge by a succession of philosophers." —192.

"I have just read Dugald Stewart's Preliminary Dissertation," writes Sydney Smith to Francis Horner, in 1816. "In the first place, it is totally clear of all his defects: no insane dread of misrepresentation; no discussion put off till another time, just at the moment it was expected and would have been interesting; no unmanly timidity; less formality of style and cathedral pomp of sentence. The good it would be trite to enumerate: the love of human happiness and virtue; the ardour for the extension of knowledge; the command of fine language; happiness of allusion; varied and pleasing literature; tact, wisdom, and moderation. Without these high qualities, we all know, Stewart cannot write."—Memoirs of Rev. Sydney Smith, ii., Letter CXXI.

Later critics have been much less enthusiastic:

"As a philosophical view of the progress of the metaphysical science, it is almost worthless. He never once rises to any comprehensive principle. There is no unity in that mass of writing, of criticism and notes. He never attempts to seize the spirit of any age and to show how it influenced others. All is isolated. Pleasant and clever as the adversaria of some student, but very inefficient if looked on as a treatise or consulted as a history. As a specimen of his carelessness, we may mention the entire omission of Spinoza, a man whose influence on speculative philosophy has been only second to that of his master Des Cartes. His extreme carelessness as to any systematic comprehension of what he was to perform, and his neglect as to arrangement of materials, are, as is remarked by a writer in the 'Quarterly Review,' [xxvi. 477, Dr. Sayers,] shown in the author's 'Advertisement,' wherein we are told that his original design (as is well known to his friends) was to comprise in ten or twelve sheets all the preliminary matter which he was to contribute to the 'Supplement.' It has now extended to about six times this length; and we are informed that he has only discussed one of the three divisions under which he had projected to arrange his subject. We cannot but observe that we think this fact sufficiently justifies all that we had ventured to say of the unpremeditated and desultory manner in which the work must have been prepared."—Eng. Cyc., Biog., v., 1857, 722.

"It may seem a harsh and presumptuous deliverance, but we have no dread of its being gainsaid,—that in our higher Philosophical Literature it would be difficult to find a less adequate treatment of so great a theme. From the absence of coherence, —the absence of any trace of unity or comprehensive principle, —the Dissertation is liker the expansion of a commonplace book than an effort to contemplate the continuous flow of Human Thought. It evinces, too, an extraordinary defect of sympathy with the whole progress of speculation in modern continental Europe: Stewart manifestly knew nothing of KANT, and he did not think it necessary to take notice of SPINOZA."—PROFESSOR J. P. NICHOL: Cyc. of Biog., ed. by E. Rich, 2d ed., 1858, 740.

The first collective edition of The Complete Works of Dugald Stewart was published by Hilliard, Gray & Co. at Cambridge, Mass., in 1829, 7 vols. 8vo; again, 1831. Contents: vols. i., ii., iii., Elements of the Philosophy of the Human Mind; Outlines of Moral Philosophy; iv., Philosophical Essays; v., Philosophy of the Active and Moral Powers of Man; vi., History of Metaphysical, &c. Philosophy; vii., Smith; Robertson; Reid; Tracts respecting the Election of Mr. Leslie, &c. A better edition, edited by Sir William Hamilton, has already been referred to, (p. 777, supra.) Contents: vol. i., 1854, Dissertation; with Additions, now first published; ii., iii., iv., 1854, Elements of the Philosophy of the Human Mind; to which are prefixed Introduction and Part First of the Outlines of Moral Philosophy, with new Additions; v., 1855, Philosophical Essays, with new Additions; vi., vii., 1855, Philosophy of the Active and Moral Powers; to which is prefixed Part Second of the Outlines of Moral Philosophy, with new Additions; viii., ix., 1855–56, Lectures on Political Economy, now first published; to which is prefixed Part Third of the Outlines of Moral Philosophy; x., 1858, Biographical Memoirs of Smith, Robertson, and Reid, with Additions; with Memoir of Stewart, by John Veitch, prefixed; xi., in preparation, 1858, Index; Translations of the Passages quoted in the Learned and Foreign Languages. This vol. is supplied gratis to subscribers by the publishers, (T. Constable & Co., Edinburgh:) the other vols. are sold for £6, or for 12*s.* each, separately. See notices in Lon. Athen., 1854, 901; Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1854, 648, 684, 819, 927, 1096; Westm. Rev., April, 1856; Lon. Gent. Mag., 1858, i. 407. Sir William Hamilton having left his Memoir of Stewart incomplete, Mr. Veitch was selected by the trustees of Miss Stewart as her father's biographer: he has accomplished his task to the satisfaction of eminent critics:

"It contains not only a nice characterization of this distinguished thinker, but also very valuable outlines of the Scottish Philosophy in its gradual development. What the celebrated editor of Dugald Stewart's Works, Sir William Hamilton, by his premature death was prevented from adding to his edition, one of his devoted pupils has executed in a way which shows how well he is versed in the sound and acute method of his excellent master, and how able he would be to teach Philosophy in any Scottish University."—Ch. A. Brandis, Bonn, May 11, 1859.

"Une longue et savante biographie de M. Dugald Stewart."—Victor Cousin, à la Sorbonne, Paris, 3 Mai, 1859. Also commended by Count De Rémusat, Samuel Tyler, and Lon. Gent. Mag., 1858, i. 407.

The memoir of Stewart in Encyc. Brit., 8th ed., xx., June, 1860, is from the hand of Mr. Veitch. A biographical sketch of Stewart, by his son, was published in the Annual Obituary for 1828; and of this paper 20 copies were privately reprinted, Edin., 1838, r. 8vo, under the title of Memoir of the Late Dugald Stewart, Esq., Author of the "Philosophy of the Human Mind," by Lieut.-Col. Matthew Stewart. This son, very foolishly, destroyed his father's MSS. of the Philosophy of Man as a Member of a Political Association, (incomplete,) Lectures on Political Economy, published from a duplicate, (ut supra,) and continuation of the Encyclopædia Dissertation. He also destroyed MSS. of his own which he calculated had cost him thirteen years' labour. See Stewart, Lieut.-Col. Matthew. It will ever be regretted that Sir William Hamilton exercised so rigid an economy in annotation when the sheets of his invaluable edition of Stewart's Works were passing from his desk to the printing-room:

"In regard to what I have myself contributed to this collection, I may repeat that I have limited my interference strictly to the province of an editor, and it was manifestly no part of my official duty to meddle with the author's reasonings. Accordingly, there has been nothing added by me, in the view of vindicating, of supplementing or confirming, of qualifying or criticising, Mr. Stewart's doctrines. I have proposed, exclusively, to render this edition the one in which these might most conveniently be studied."—Collected Works of Dugald Stewart, ii.

For what he has done, however,—the rectification and filling up of authorities and their citations and explanatory notes,—we are duly thankful.

It has been remarked that Stewart

"left the Scottish School, in all vital respects, in the condition in which he found it,—'having,' in the words of Cousin, 'a commencement in psychology, but no regular logic, neither a metaphysic, nor a theodicœa, nor a cosmology,—a little of morals and politics, but no system.'"—Professor J. P. Nichol: Cyc. of Biog.

In contrast with this, or certainly as supplementary to it, should be quoted the summary of the greatest modern representative of British philosophy:

"The Scottish School of Philosophy is distinctively characterized by its opposition to all the destructive schemes of speculation:—in particular, to Skepticism, or the uncertainty of Knowledge; to Idealism, or the non-existence of the material world; to Fatalism, or the denial of a moral universe. Reid has the merit of originating this movement, and Stewart the honour of continuing and promoting and extending it."—Sir William Hamilton: Lects. on Metaphysics, Appendix (C.)

Mr. Morell arranges Stewart's contributions to Scottish philosophy under the following heads:

"1. He introduced many great improvements into the metaphysical phraseology of his school. . . .

"2. Another service which Stewart rendered was to revise the classification which Reid had left behind him, of the phenomena of the human mind. . . .

"3. But one of the greatest services which Stewart rendered to the philosophy of his country is due to the manner in which he illustrated, confirmed, and adorned it by his learning. Reid seemed as if he gloried in standing directly opposed to the authority of more than two thousand years. Stewart, on the contrary, rather sought to prove that the philosophy of other ages and other nations often tended to support his own."—Hist. and Crit. View of the Spec. Philos. of Europe, &c., ii. ch. v. See also, Index.

Stewart's style of composition has always been considered one of the very best:

"Dugald Stewart has carried embellishment farther into the region of metaphysics than any other author that has preceded him; and his embellishment is invariably consistent with perfect sobriety of taste."—Robert Hall.

"The sagacious, the enlightened, and the virtuous Dugald Stewart, in whose writings are united the perspicuity of Dr. Reid, the acuteness of Adam Smith, and the precision of David Hume."—Dr. Parr: Spital Sermon.

"Few writers rise with more grace from a plain groundwork to the passages which require greater animation or embellishment. He gives to narrative, according to the precept of Bacon, the colour of the time, by a selection of happy expressions from original writers. Among the secret arts by which he diffuses elegance over his diction, may be remarked the skill which, by deepening or brightening a shade in a secondary term, by opening partial or preparatory glimpses of a thought to be afterwards unfolded, unobservedly heightens the import of a word, and gives it a new meaning, without any offence against old use."—Sir James Mackintosh: Prelim. Dissert. to Encyc. Brit., 8th ed., i. 405.

To these eulogies on the elaborate composition of the author fain would we add, did space permit, a few attestations to the extraordinary eloquence of his extemporaneous lectures:

"All the years I remained about Edinburgh," remarks a distinguished philosopher, "I used as often as I could to steal into Mr. Stewart's class to hear a lecture, which was always a high treat. I have heard Pitt and Fox deliver some of their most admired speeches, but I never heard any thing nearly so eloquent as some of the lectures of Professor Stewart. The taste for the studies which have formed my favourite pursuits, and which will, be so to the end of my life, I owe to him."—James Mill.

"To me," exclaims another of his pupils, "his lectures were like the opening of the heavens! I felt that I had a soul! His noble views, unfolded in glorious sentences, elevated me into a higher world! I was as much excited and charmed as any man of cultivated taste would be who, after being ignorant of their existence, was admitted to all the glories of Milton and Cicero and Shakespeare. They changed my whole nature.

"In short, Dugald Stewart was one of the greatest of didactic orators. Had he lived in ancient times, his memory would have descended to us as that of one of the finest of the old eloquent sages."—Lord Cockburn: Memorials of his Time, 1856, ch. i.

"Without derogation from his writings," observes Mackintosh, "it may be said that his disciples were among his best works.

. . . He lived to see his disciples distinguished among the lights and ornaments of the council and the senate."—Prelim. Dissert. to Encyc. Brit.

Still, John, b. at Grantham, Lincolnshire, 1543 (?), and educated at Christ College, Cambridge, became Lady Margaret's Professor of Divinity, 1570; Preb. of Westminster, 1573; Master of St. John's College, 1574, and of Trinity College, 1577; Archdeacon of Sudbury, March 6, 1576–7; Bishop of Bath and Wells, Feb. 11, 1592–3; d. Feb. 26, 1607–8. To Still is ascribed, by the general consent of antiquaries, A ryght pithy, pleasant, and merie Comedy, intytuled Gammer Gurton's Nedle; played on the stage not longe ago, in Christes Colledge, in Cambridge. Made by Mr. S., master of art, &c., Lon., 1575, 4to. Rhodes, 2399, £10; Bindley, Pt. 3, 2051, £19 5s.; G. Daniel, July, 1864, 652, £64. Again, 1661, 4to. Repub. in Hawkins's Origin of the Old English Drama; Dodsley's Old Plays, vol. ii., &c. Collier and Malone assign 1565 as the date of the first representation of this play;

"but it is merely conjectural, as one rather earlier might be chosen with equal probability. Still is said in the biographies to have been born in 1543; but this date seems to be too low. He became Margaret's Professor of Divinity in 1570. Gammer Gurton's Nedle must have been written while the Protestant establishment, if it existed, was very recent; for the parson is evidently a papist."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, ii. 166, n.

Nicolas Udall's Ralph Royster Doyster is esteemed the first, Misogonus the second, and Gammer Gurton's Needle the third, English comedy. The second and third are in long and irregularly-measured rhyme. The second act of the Needle opens with what Warton calls "the first Chanson à Boire, or Drinking Ballad, of any merit in our language:"

"I cannot eat but little meat," better known by the chorus:

"Backe and side go bare, go bare," of which an excellent translation into Latin, preserving the measure, with rhymes and double rhymes, by Dr. Maginn, will be found in Noctes Ambrosianæ, April, 1822, (Blackw. Mag., xii. 108.)

"The humour of this curious old drama . . . is broad, familiar, and grotesque; the characters are sketched with a strong though coarse outline, and are to the last consistently supported."—DR. DRAKE: Shaksp. and his Time, ii. 233.

"It is impossible for any thing to be meaner in subject and characters than this strange farce; but the author had some vein of humour, and, writing neither for fame nor money, but to make light-hearted boys laugh, and to laugh with them, and that with as little grossness as the story would admit, is not to be judged with severe criticism."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, ii. 166.

"The writer has a degree of jocularity which sometimes rises above buffoonery, but is often disgraced by lowness of incident. Yet in a more polished age he would have chosen, nor would he perhaps have disgraced, a better subject."—WARTON: Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ed. 1840, iii. 180, (q. v.)

Stillingfleet, Rev. E. M. Serm., Fast-Day, 1811, 8vo.

Stillingfleet, Edward, D.D., one of the most learned divines of the Church of England, was b. at Cranbourne, Dorsetshire, 1635; entered St. John's College, 1648; became B.A. 1652, and was elected Fellow, 1653; M.A., 1656; Preacher at the Rolls, 1664; Rector of St. Andrew's, Holborn, and Lecturer at the Temple, 1665; Preb. of St. Paul's, 1667; D.D., 1668; Preb. of Canterbury, 1669; Chaplain to Charles II., and by him, in 1670, made Canon Residentiary of St. Paul's; Archdeacon of London, 1677; Dean of St. Paul's, Jan. 1677–8; Prolocutor of the Lower House of Convocation, temp. Charles II. and James II.; Bishop of Worcester, 1689; d. in Westminster, March 27, 1699. He was the author of several elaborate treatises, a number of sermons, many controversial tracts directed against the Romanists, Dissenters, John Locke, &c., (see list in Watt's Bibl. Brit.) A collective edition of his Works, with the Author's Life and Character, (by Dr. Timothy Godwin; also issued separately, 1710, 8vo,) was pub. Lon., 1710, 6 vols. fol., (see Contents in Darling's Cyc. Bibl., i. 2849;) and a supplementary volume, entitled Miscellaneous Discourses, (on ecclesiastical cases, &c., 12 in all,) was pub. by his son, James Stillingfleet, (infra,) 1735, 8vo. His principal works are: 1. Irenicum: a Weapon-Salve for the Churches Wounds; or, The Divine Right of Particular Forms of Church Government Discussed and Examined, &c., Lon., 1661, sm. 4to; 2d ed., 1662, sm. 4to; new ed., Phila.

"He, in his youth, writ an Irenicum for healing our divisions, with so much learning and moderation that it was esteemed a master-piece. . . . The argument was managed with so much learning and skill, that none of either side ever undertook to answer it."—BISHOP BURNET: Hist. of his Own Times, ed. 1833, i. 343.

"The injustice of intolerance is combatted and exposed in a very brief and masterly manner by Bishops Taylor and Stillingfleet. Both plead for religious liberty; the one when it was violated by oppression, the other when it was in danger from fresh resentments."—BISHOP WARBURTON.

"A very valuable Treatise, but to be read in connection with his Unreasonableness of Separation," [No. 10.]—Bickersteth's C. S., 4th ed., 380.

See, also, Dr. Williams's C. P., 5th ed., 363; RULE, GILBERT, No. 1.

Later in life the author retracted the Low-Church concessions made in Irenicum: see his Works, 1710, i. 12.

2. Origines Sacræ; or, A Rational Account of the Christian Faith, &c., Lon., 1662, 4to; 2d ed., 1663, 4to; 3d ed., 1666, sm. 4to; 5th ed., 1680, 4to; 7th ed., to which is now (for the first time) added Part of another book upon the same subject, written 1697, from the author's own manuscript, 1704, fol., (pub. by Richard Bentley, the late bishop's chaplain;) 8th ed., 1709, fol.; again: 1724, fol.; Oxf., 1797, 2 vols. 8vo; 1817, 2 vols. 8vo; 1836, (some 1837,) 2 vols. 8vo.

"He [the student] will begin with a defence of Revelation in general, as it lies in Grotius de Veritate Christianæ Religionis, enlarged by Stillingfleet's Origines Sacræ, which may be considered a kind of Commentary on the other's Text. The work I mean is that written by Mr. Stillingfleet;—not that unfinished little work which bears the same title, written when he became Bishop of Worcester."—BISHOP WARBURTON: Directions to his Student.

"Justly esteemed one of the best defences of revealed religion that ever was extant in our own or any other language."—DR. GOODWIN.

"This is a very learned and valuable work."—Orme's Bibl. Bib., 420.

See, also, Leland's Deist. Writers, ed. 1837, 35, 305, 614.

3. Rational Account of the Grounds of Protestant Religion; being a Vindication of Archbishop Laud's Relation of a Conference, [see FISHER, JOHN,] Lon., 1665, fol 2d ed., 1681, fol.; again, 1702, fol.; with Additions, 1709, fol., (pub. by Dr. R. Bentley;) Oxf. Univ. Press, 1844, 2 vols. 8vo.

"In every part answering to its title,—a rational account."—ARCHBISHOP TILLOTSON.

"All Bishop Stillingfleet's works against Popery are valuable."—Bickersteth's C. S., 477. See, also, 287, 445.

4. Discourse concerning the Idolatry practised in the Church of Rome, &c., 2d ed., Lon., 1671, 8vo; 1672, 8vo. See CRESSEY, or CRESSY, HUGH PAULIN DE; WOODHEAD, ABRAHAM, No. 4; Gibson's Preservative, x. 325. 5. Answer to Several Treatises occasioned by a Book entitled A Discourse, &c., [No. 4,] 1673, 8vo; 1674, 8vo. 6. Answer to Mr. Cressy's Epistle Apologetical, &c., 1675, 8vo. See WARNER, JOHN, No. 1. 7. Defence of the Discourse, &c., [No. 4,] in Two Parts, 1676, 8vo. See GODWIN, THOMAS. 8. The Grand Question concerning the Bishops' Right to Vote in Parliament in Cases Capital, &c., 1680, 8vo. See Bishop Nicolson's Eng. Hist. Lib., ed. 1776, 159. 9. The Mischief of Separation; a Sermon, 1680, 4to. Attacked by Owen, Baxter, V. Alsop, &c. He replied in—10. The Unreasonableness of Separation from the Church of England, &c., 1681, 4to; 2d ed., 1681, 4to; continued by another hand, 1682, 4to. See No. 1. For a list of works elicited by Nos. 9 and 10, see Lowndes's Brit. Lib., 1135. 11. Origines Britannicæ; or, The Antiquities of the British Churches, &c., 1685, fol.; 1837, 8vo; 1840, 8vo: see, also, LLOYD, WILLIAM. Continuation: see INETT, JOHN, D.D., No. 1. This work "perfected all the collections of former historians on that subject."—BISHOP NICOLSON.

"Learned and valuable."—Bickersteth's C. S., 512.

12. The Doctrines and Practices of the Church of Rome truly Represented, in Answer to a Book intituled "A Papist Misrepresented and Represented," 1686, 4to. Anon. Also in Gibson's Preservative, xiii. 208. New ed., with Preface and Notes by W. Cunningham, D.D., Edin., 1845, fp. 8vo; again, 1851. See GOTHER, JOHN. A list of the Discourses written during the Representing Controversy in the Reign of King James II. will be found in the Rev. T. H. Horne's Cat. of Queen's Coll. Lib. Camb., 226–228. 13. Discourse concerning the Illegality of the Ecclesiastical Commission, &c., Lon., 1689. Anon. 14. Discourse concerning the Doctrine of Christ's Satisfaction, &c., 1696, 8vo; again, 1697, 8vo; Part 2, (posth.,) 1700, 8vo. Bickersteth recommends this work, (C. S., 359,) and thinks that a reprint of it "would be advantageous."

15. Discourse in Vindication of the Doctrine of the Trinity, &c., 1697, 8vo; 2d ed., including No. 16, 1697, 8vo. 16. Answer to Mr. Locke's Letter concerning Some Passages relating to his Essay of Humane Understanding; mentioned in the Late Discourse in Vindication of the Trinity, 1697, 8vo. See No. 15. 17. Answer to Mr. Locke's Second Letter; wherein his Notion of Ideas is proved to be inconsistent with itself and with the Articles of the Christian Faith, 1698, 8vo. Subjoined is a full account of the bishop's works. See Nos. 15, 16; LOCKE, JOHN, (pp. 1113, 1114,) No. 5; Locke's Philos. Works, ed. by J. A. St. John, 1854, 2 vols. p. 8vo, (Bohn's Stand. Lib.,) ii. 339–411; Controversy with the Bishop of Worcester; Morell's Hist. of Mod. Philos., 2d ed., 1847, i. 134; Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed. 1854, iii. 381; conclusion of this article. 18. Ecclesiastical Cases, [8 in number;] in Two Parts: 1, 1698, 8vo; 2, 1704, 8vo. The vol. of Miscellaneous Discourses, 1735, 8vo, is sometimes sold as vol. iii. of Ecclesiastical Cases.

"The best account of the present state of our Tithes . . . is lately given by the most learned Bishop Stillingfleet, who never fails of exhausting whatever subject he pretends to treat on."—BISHOP NICOLSON: Eng. Hist. Lib., ed. 1776, 143. See, also, vii. 140.

Six of his Sermons, with a Discourse on Christ's Sufferings, were pub. in one vol., 1669, 8vo; a collection of his Sermons, entitled vols. i. and iii., was pub. 1673, fol.; a collection in 4 vols. 8vo was issued—vol. i., 1696, ii., 1697, iii., 1698, iv., 1701; and these last, with two added, compose the Fifty Sermons found in vol. i. of his Works, 1710, fol. A vol. of his Sermons was pub. York, 1794, 8vo. There is improperly ascribed to our author a vol. On the Amusements of Clergymen and Christians in General, Lon., 1820, 12mo. A republication of Stillingfleet's treatises and sermons in a handsome uniform edition is a desideratum. For further notices of the author and his works, we refer to the Life prefixed to vol. i. of his Works, 1710, fol.; Biog. Brit., vi., 1763, p. 3836, (by Mr. Morant;) Dryden's Works; Nichols's Anec. of Lit., vii. 399, 682, (Index;) Nichols's Illust. of Lit., viii., 1858, 103, (Index;) Monk's Bentley; Orme's Baxter; Orme's Owen; Rogers's Howe; Pursuits of Lit.; Strong's Cat. of Eng. Divinity, 1829–30, Pt. 1, 4766–4783, Pt. 2, 9775–9783. See, also, ASSHETON, WILLIAM, Nos. 3, 6; BURNET, GILBERT; PEARSON, JOHN, D.D., No. 1, (quotation from Hallam;) TILLOTSON, JOHN, D.D.; WOLSEY, JOHN.

In contrasting Tillotson and our author, an eminent authority remarks,

"Stillingfleet was a man of much more learning, but of a more reserved and a haughtier temper. . . . He was a great man in many respects. He knew the world well, and was esteemed a very wise man. . . . He applied himself much to the study of the law and records, and the original of our constitution, and was a very extraordinary man."—BISHOP BURNET: Hist. of his Own Times, ed. 1837, i. 343, 344.

Tillotson himself, in a letter to Frederick Spanheim, calls Stillingfleet The Glory of our Church,—De quo Ecclesia nostra merito gloriatur: see Birch's Life of Tillotson.

"A man deeply versed in ecclesiastical antiquity, of an argumentative mind, excellently fitted for polemical dispute, but perhaps by those habits of his life rendered too much of an advocate to satisfy an impartial reader. In the critical reign of James II. he may be considered as the leader on the Protestant side; but Wake, Tillotson, and several more would deserve mention in a fuller history of ecclesiastical literature."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 269. See, also, 276, 298, 381.

"When I was a young man, I had formed a mean opinion of the reasoning faculties of Bishop Stillingfleet, from reading Mr. Locke's Letter and two replies to him; but a better acquaintance with the bishop's works has convinced me that my opinion was ill formed. Though no match for Mr. Locke in strength and acuteness of argument, yet his 'Origines Sacræ,' and other works, show him to have been not merely a searcher into ecclesiastical antiquities, but a sound divine and a good reasoner."—DR. WATSON, Bishop of Llandaff.

"Of Locke he [Coleridge] spoke, as usual, with great contempt, —that is, in reference to his metaphysical work. He considered him as having led to the destruction of metaphysical science by encouraging the unlearned public to think that with mere common sense they might dispense with disciplined study. He praised Stillingfleet as Locke's opponent."—H. C. Robinson's Diary, &c., Bost. ed., 1870, i. 200.

Story, John. Babilon's Defence Broken Down, Lon., 1660, 4to.

Story, John. Travels through Sweden: see Churchill's Voyages, Supp., vol. i.; Osbourn's Voyages, vol. i. 299, 1745.

Story, Joseph, LL.D., the son of Elisha Story, M.D., of the American Revolutionary Army, was b. at Marblehead, Mass., September 18, 1779; graduated at Harvard College, 1798; admitted to the Essex Bar, July, 1801; chosen a member of the Legislature of Massachusetts, 1805, 1806, 1807, and a member of the National House of Representatives, 1808,—declining to serve more than one session; re-elected to the Legislature of Massachusetts, May, 1810, and served until January, 1812, having been chosen Speaker of the House, January, 1811; appointed by President Madison Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, November 18, 1811, and Dane Professor of Law in Harvard College, June 11, 1829, and discharged the duties of both of these offices with eminent ability until his death, September 10, 1845. Judge Story is well known at home and abroad by a number of legal treatises of the highest character. To quote many testimonies to the value of these may seem superfluous; but it is by no means superfluous to direct the attention of the student to some of the learned reviews and notices (which we find recorded chiefly in Story's Life and Letters, ii. 648–665, and Marvin's Leg. Bibl., 668–674) which set forth the excellences of his publications.

The following summary, by his son and biographer, must find a place here:

"When we review his public life, the amount of labor accomplished by him seems enormous. Its mere recapitulation is sufficient to appall an ordinary mind. The judgments delivered by him on his Circuit comprehend thirteen volumes. The Reports [Cranch, Wheaton, Peters, and Howard] of the Supreme Court during his judicial life occupy thirty-five volumes, of which he wrote a full share. His various treatises on legal subjects cover thirteen volumes, besides a volume of Pleadings. He edited and annotated three different treatises, with copious notes, and published a volume of Poems. He delivered and published eight discourses on literary and scientific subjects before different societies. He wrote biographical sketches of ten of his contemporaries; six elaborate reviews for the North American, [1817 et seq.;] three long and learned memorials to Congress. He delivered many elaborate speeches in the Legislature of Massachusetts and the Congress of the United States. He contributed a large number of valuable articles to the Encyclopædia Americana, and to the American Jurist. He also drew up many other papers of importance, among which are the Argument before Harvard College on the subject of the Fellows of the University; the Reports on Codification, and on the Salaries of the Judiciary; several very important Acts of Congress, such as the Crimes Act, the Judiciary Act, the Bankrupt Act, besides many other smaller matters. In quantity, all other authors in the English Law, and judges, must yield to him the palm."—Story's Life, ii. 566.

To these should be added his unprinted Digest of Law, supplementary to Comyns's, and on the same plan, now in three MS. folio volumes in the Law Library of Harvard University: see Catalogue, 1842, 238, and Story's Life, i. 119. The three treatises above referred to as edited by Judge Story are: I. Chitty on Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes, Bost., 8vo, 1809; 2d ed., 1819; II. Abbot on Shipping, 8vo, 1810; 2d ed., 1829; III. Lawes on Assumpsit, 8vo, 1811: see Story's Life, i. 204, 570. His articles in Encyclopædia Americana (a gratuitous contribution to his friend Dr. Francis Lieber, and gratefully acknowledged by him,—see his Civil Liberty, ed. 1859, 216, n.) are the following: Common Law; Congress of the United States; Conquest; Contracts; Corpus Delicti; Courts of England and the United States, (all in vol. iii.;) Criminal Law; Death Punishment; Domicil; Equity; Evidence; Jury; Lien; Law; Legislation and Codes; Natural Law; National Law; Prize; Usury, (all in vols. iv.–xii.) These essays occupy more than 120 pp. closely printed in double columns. See Story's Life, ii. 26–27, 241; Lieber's Essays on Prop. and Lab., 34, n.; Park's Equity, 1831, 15. For a list of his contributions to Wheaton's Reports, Wheaton's Digest of the Decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, N. York, 1821, 8vo, and the American Jurist, see Story's Life, i. 283, 434. Nor were all these multiplied labours sufficient to quench his indomitable zeal in the cause of the learning of his profession,—the inherited "debt" to which one would have thought he had already discharged fourfold: not so thought Judge Story. Acting upon the spirit of the precept Nil actum reputans dum quid superesset agendum, death found him busy with projects for future usefulness: The Law of Shipping, Equity Practice, Admiralty, embracing the Prize and Instance branches, and the Law of Nations, were each to have formed the subject of an elaborate treatise; and Reminiscences of his times and contemporaries, somewhat after the manner of Charles Butler, (p. 312, supra,) would have fitly rounded a well-spent life. See letter of Charles Sumner to William W. Story, in Story's Life, ii. 573. In 1835 appeared a selection of Judge Story's Miscellaneous Writings, Literary, Critical, Juridical, and Political, Bost., 8vo, (see Story's Life, ii. 215, 237; Chris. Exam., 1835; Lon. Quar. Rev., lxvii. 32, by A. Hayward;) and an enlarged edition, under the title of Miscellaneous Writings, edited by his son, William W. Story, was published in 1852, (some 1854,) 8vo, pp. x., 828. This volume should be in every public and private library; and next to it should stand, Life and Letters of Joseph Story, &c.; Edited by his son, William W. Story, 1851, (some 1852,) 2 vols. 8vo, pp. xii., 574, viii., 676. Reviewed in Edin. Rev., Oct. 1852, art. ii., (same in Bost. Liv. Age, xxxv. 515;) Lon. Quar. Rev., Jan. 1853, art. ii.; Lon. We had intended to quote the opinions of a number of eminent authorities respecting the subject of our sketch as a man and a legal writer; but this indulgence want of space obliges us to restrict. For the following estimate of his character, written at our request, we are indebted to a valued friend of ours, who knew and loved the subject of his eulogy and was known and beloved by him:

"That which characterized Judge Story, as a man, a scholar, a jurist, and a judge, may perhaps be summed up in this manner. He was of a most kind and genial temper as a husband, father, and friend. Aiding, in whatever manner, was a delight to him. He had a most sympathizing soul, and jealousy was unknown to him. Whether a person applied to him in need, whether a student, young or old, desired his advice, whether an enterprise of common utility or elevated character was to be promoted, he was ready to aid to his utmost power in its furtherance. He had a large soul, and took the deepest interest in all branches and all culture. He was a patriot in the widest sense, warmly loving his country and her institutions; but his patriotism did not narrow his mind. Humanity was his earthly deity. He was ardently devoted to his profession; but here, too, the law had no confining effect. Holding the principles of the Common Law in great honour, he acknowledged whatever is great in the Civil Law and in the jurisprudence of any other country,—a fact well proved by his Decisions and Opinions, and especially by those branches of the law which he first carved out and presented as separate parts. In this respect he was perhaps the most enlightened jurist that our land has produced. If we may justly say that the three constituents of a great judge are a deep, detailed, and continuous study of the law, unswerving conscientiousness mellowed by kindly sympathy, and philosophical acumen combined with the rare art of analyzing complex cases into their elements in order to rise from them again safely and steadily to general rules, we may assert that he especially excelled in the two first, having, however, few superiors in the last. He added to all this the important faculty of a transparent and lucid language. He was fortunate in rising early to a high station, so that he was enabled by his gifts, labours, and correct notions, as well as by the purity of his feelings, to make a distinct impression on the history of his country: so much so, that we know of no foreigner desirous of becoming thoroughly and comprehensively acquainted with the United States that leaves his works unstudied. His name will forever grace the list of leading men in a period of our country which we fear was greater than that in which we live."—Dr. Francis Lieber: Letter to S. Austin Allibone, January, 1857.

"I think all the treatises of my friend Story are, upon the whole, the most finished and perfect of their kind to be met with in any language, foreign or domestic; and for learning, industry, and talent, he is the most extraordinary jurist of the age."—Chancellor Kent: Letter, July 31, 1841: *Louisa. Stothard, Thomas, an eminent painter, father of the preceding, b. in London, 1755; was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, 1785; Royal Academician, 1794; Deputy Librarian to the Royal Academy, 1810, and Librarian from 1812 until his death, 1834. It is estimated that he made more than 5000 designs; and of these 3000 were engraved by Collins, Heath, Parker, Cromek, and Medland. His best-known illustrations are those in the Town and Country Magazine, Bell's British Poets, Novelist's Magazine, Boydell's Shakspeare, Milton, Spenser, Don Quixote, Walton's Complete Angler, Rogers's Italy, Rogers's Poems, and—considered by Les-

He his best—Robinson Crusoe, 1790, &c., 2 vols. r. 8vo, and Pilgrim's Progress, 1794, &c., 8vo. Of his other compositions, The Centenary Pilgrims, The Flitch of Bacon, The Fête Champêtre, Four Periods of a Sailor's Life, and The Wellington Shield are among the favourites. The Life of Stothard, 1851, sm. 4to, has already been noticed, (Bray, Mrs. Anne Eliza:) see notices of it in Lon. Times, 1851; Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1852, 7; Lon. Gent. Mag., 1852, i. 146. Our correspondent, Mr. Balmanno, informed us (letter of 13th April, 1852) that Mrs. Bray is in error in stating that his collection of engravings after Stothard amounted to over 4000 in number. There are upwards of 2000. They cost him more than £200, and were sold by him to the British Museum for £90.

"Laurence, Constable, Wilkie, and Chantrey were his great admirers; and Turner proved the sincerity of his admiration by painting a picture in avowed imitation of him. Stow, John, b. in London, 1525, after dividing his attention between his tailor's shop and antiquarian pursuits, when about forty years of age resolved to devote himself to the latter, and followed the pursuit with great zeal and until his death, April 5, 1605. His declining years were embittered by penury; and we find him when nearly eighty years of age constituted by royal letters-patent a public beggar, and recommended to charity on the ground of his having "compiled and published diverse necessary books and chronicles." The author of the article on Stow in the English Cyclopædia, Biography, v., 1857, 746–749, after remarking that the accounts that have been given of Stowe's publications are for the most part very defective, confused, and contradictory, presents an excellent summary, which, with the authorities cited below, we commend to the attention of the reader: our own recital must be very brief.

1. A Summarie of Englysh Chronicles, Lon., (1561,) 12mo. A copy, supposed unique, is in the Grenville Library. Lowndes also notices editions: 1566; 1570; 1575, 8vo; 1579; 1584; 1587; 1590; 1598; 1604, 16mo. Chalmers describes an ed. 1573, 8vo. Mr. Thomas (his ed. of the Survey, &c., infra) suggests that Stow published an edition every year.

After his death it was republished, with Continuations, under the title of The Abridgement of the English Chronicles, by E. H., (Edmond Howes,) 1607, sm. 8vo; 1610, sm. 8vo; 1611, sm. 8vo, (J. Lilly's Bibl. A.-C., 1869, £2 12*s.* 6*d.*;) 1618, sm. 8vo. Stow also published a Summarie of Chronicles Abridged 1566, 8vo; with Continuations, 1587, 8vo; 1579, 8vo; 1584, 1587, 1598, 1604: see GRAFTON, RICHARD. See Herbert's Typ. Antiq., ii. 853, n.; Bibl. West., 3770.

"Stow and Grafton are said to have been jealous of each other's credit; there can, however, be no doubt of the former's supremacy."—DR. JOHN ALLEN: Edin. Rev., March, 1831, 5.

2. Annales; or, A Generall Chronicle of England from Brute vnto this Present Yeare of Christ, 1580, 4to; 1592, 4to; 1600, 4to; 1605, 4to: J. Lilly's Bibl. Anglo-Curiosa, 1869, 126, £3 13*s*. 6*d*. Continued by Edmond Howes, 1615, fol. Libri, 2546, Jas. I.'s copy, fine paper, £2 12*s*. 2d ed., to 1631, 1631, fol. Holland, 1860, £3 7*s*.; Evans, in 1818, thick paper, £6 2*s*. 6*d*.; Duke of Grafton, 887, thick paper, £6 2*s*. 6*d*. See Fuller's Worthies, ed. 1840, ii. 380; Bp. Nicolson's Eng. Hist. Lib., ed. 1776, 59; Dibdin's Lib. Comp., ed. 1825, 198; BUC, or BUCK, SIR GEORGE. The Chronicles, (edits. 1600, 1605,) Stow tells Whitgift, were but an abstract of a larger work ready for the press,—which it never reached.

3. A Survay of London, 1598, sm. 4to; 2d ed., 1603, sm. 4to; 3d ed., continued, &c. by A. M., (Anthony Munday,) 1618, sm. 4to; 4th ed., Inlarged by A. M. and H. D., (Anthony Munday and Humphrey Dyson, C. J., and others,) 1633, fol.; 5th ed., Enlarged and Continued, with Life of Stow and Appendixes, by John Strype, 1720, 2 vols. fol. Nearly three-fourths consists of additions by Strype. B. Quaritch's Cat., 1859, 4879, £3 3*s*. 6th ed., 1754–55, 2 vols. fol. Lilly's Cat., s. a., sed 1857, p. 68, also in his Bibl. A.-C., 1869, 123, clean, perfect copy, £21; J. B. Nichols & Son's Cat., about 1857, £12 12*s*. See Cat. of J. B. Nichols's Library, 1864. New ed., reprinted from the two editions of 1598 and 1603; with Notes, a Memoir, and Copious Index, by W. J. Thoms, Esq., F.S.A., 1842, med. 8vo; again, 1846.

"England is indebted to him for the most elaborate coeval picture of the brilliant era of Elizabeth, and London for the traces of her growth during six centuries. He is the faithful chronicler of gaieties and gravities,—of whatever he conceived would interest his contemporaries and posterity."—BOLTON CORNEY: New Curios. of Lit. See, also, SEYMOUR, ROBERT.

4. The Successions of the History of England, &c., 1638, fol., "probably a fragment of a larger work." Watt (Bibl. Brit.) ascribes to him the paper on the Antiquity of the Word Stirlingorum, or Sterling, in Hearne's Collec., i. 200, 1771. Watt's account of his volumes has been called "a mere jumble of blunders." Stow tells us (in his Annals) that Speight's Chaucer was founded upon written copies corrected by him; and Dr. David Powel acknowledges his assistance in his History of Cambria, published in 1584: see, also, HOLINSHED, RAPHAEL. "The honest historian Stowe."—HUME: Hist. of Eng., reign of James I., Append., note S.

"He well deserves to be remembered with honour. . . . He always protested, and we may take his honest word for it, that he never was swayed by favour or fear in any of his writings; but that he had impartially, to the best of his knowledge, delivered the truth. This good opinion the greatest of our later historians seem to have of him."—BISHOP NICOLSON: Eng. Hist. Lib., ed. 1776, 59.

2. Uncle Tom's Cabin, Bost., 1852, 2 vols. 12mo: Illustrated ed., 1853, 8vo. Originally published in weekly parts in the (Washington) National Era from June 5, 1851, to April 1, 1852. In book-form the sale in the United States reached 100,000 copies in eight weeks, 200,000 within a year, and 313,000 by April 28, 1856. It is said that thirty editions were pub. in London in 1852 in six months,—but here we will borrow a note from a transatlantic authority:

"The first London edition was published in May, 1852, and was not large; for the European popularity of a picture of negro life was doubted. But in the following September the London publishers furnished to one house 10,000 copies per day for about four weeks, and had to employ 1000 persons in preparing copies to supply the general demand.

"We cannot follow it beyond 1852; but at that time more than a million of copies had been sold in England, probably ten times as many as have been sold of any other work, except the Bible and Prayer-Book.

"In France 'Uncle Tom' still covers the shop-windows of the Boulevards; and one publisher alone, Eustace Barba, has sent out five different editions in different forms. Before the end of 1852 it had been translated into Italian, Spanish, Danish, Swedish, Dutch, Flemish, German, Polish, and Magyar. There are two different Dutch translations and twelve different German ones; and the Italian translation enjoys the honour of the Pope's prohibition. It has been dramatised in twenty different forms, and acted in every capital in Europe and in the free States of America."—Edin. Rev., April, 1855, art. i., (Slavery in the U. States.)

(For particulars of the British editions, see S. Low & Son's British Catalogues, Lon., 1852–70.) We should like to supplement this bibliographical note by stating the number of copies sold to the present date; but we are assured, on the best authority, that it is impossible to estimate them,—but that they "amount to millions."

We are, however, enabled to present a List of the Translations of Uncle Tom's Cabin to Oct. 1, 1862:

French, 3 or 4 versions.	Russian, 2 versions.
German, 13 or 14 "	Polish.
Dutch, 2 "	Magyar, 3 "
Danish.	Wendish.
Swedish.	Wallachian, 2 "
Portuguese.	Armenian.
Spanish.	Arabic.
Italian.	Romaic.
Welsh, 2 "

It is said that there is also a Chinese version and a Japanese version.

Mr. Thomas Watts, late of the British Museum, had an extensive collection of these different translations; and perhaps no one was better able to compare their respective merits. Mrs. Stowe subsequently published Peep into Uncle Tom's Cabin, &c., for Children, Lon. and Bost., 1853, fp. 8vo; and The Christian Slave; a Drama, founded on Uncle Tom's Cabin, Bost., 1855, 12mo.

"If Mrs. Stowe is writing for posterity, if she wishes her works, after they have served their immediate purpose of anti-slavery pamphlets, to take a permanent place in English literature, she must devote to the task of adapting these to the taste of the best-educated part of the English public, far more labour than she has as yet bestowed on them."—*Lon. In December, 1868, there was published in London a book recently completed, entitled My Recollections of Lord Byron, and those of Eye-Witnesses of his Life; by the Countess Guiccioli; Translated by Hubert E. H. Jerningham, 2 vols. 8vo. This book, reviewed in Blackw. Mag., July, 1869, &c., was reprinted in New York in March, 1869, 8vo, pp. 670: and in September, 1869, there appeared in the Atlantic Monthly Magazine, Boston, and Macmillan's Magazine, London, an article entitled The True Story of Lady Byron's Life. This was reviewed with great severity in the Quarterly Review for October, 1869, (The Byron Mystery,) The Saturday Review, London Times, Pall Mall Gazette, and many other English, (see Littell's Living Age, Oct. 9, 1869,) American, French, and German periodicals. As an impartial chronicler, it is proper to state that we know of no instance of such sweeping censure—of such general, almost universal, condemnation—as that with which Mrs. Stowe's alleged offence was visited; and this equally by the few who believed as by the many who disbelieved her story. In September, 1869, three volumes upon the subject were published in London: I. A Complete Résumé of the Stowe-Byron Controversy, by the Editor of Once-a-Week, cr. 8vo. II. The True Story of Lord and Lady Byron, as Told by Lord Macaulay, Thomas Moore, Lord Lindsay, Leigh Hunt, the Countess of Blessington, the Countess Guiccioli, Lady Byron, and by the Poet himself; in Answer to Mrs. Beecher Stowe; Edited by J. M., [John Camden Hotten,] 12mo. III. A Vindication of Lord Byron, by Alfred Austin, cr. 8vo. These were followed by—IV. Medora Leigh; a History and an Autobiography; with an Introduction and Commentary on Charges brought against Lord Byron by Mrs. Beecher Stowe, by Charles Mackay, Editor, Dec. 1869, cr. 8vo; New York, Jan. 1870, 8vo, pp. 63. V. The True Story of Mrs. Shakespeare's Life, Bost., Jan. 1870. Reprinted from a London magazine. In December, 1869, Mrs. Stowe reaffirmed her original statement, in a volume entitled Lady Byron Vindicated: a History of the Byron Controversy from its Beginning in 1816 to the Present Time, Boston, 16mo. We use much milder language than most of the lady's critics when we say that this vindication is considered unsatisfactory.

Mrs. Stowe is the author of The Two Altars, (Amer. Anti-Slavery Tracts, No. 13;) of five tracts,—A Word to the Sorrowful, My Expectation, My Strength, Strong Consolation, and Things that Cannot be Shaken,—each 32mo, pub. in London in 1858; of articles in Hall's Monthly Magazine, Godey's Lady's Book, The New York Evangelist, The Independent, Our Young Folks, Old and New, &c.; and of the Introduction to the Works of Charlotte Elizabeth, (Mrs. Tonna,) N. Descriptive of explorations among the mountains of Essex county, New York.

He has published several poems delivered at public institutions,—Geneva College, 1840, (annexed to No. 2;) Hamilton College, 1850; Yale College, 1851; Pittsfield Institute, 1852,—and contributed to Lyrics of Loyalty, 1863, 24mo, the Knickerbocker, Graham's, and The Historical Magazines, Godey's Lady's Book, The Crayon, and Bentley's Miscellany. In 1843–44 (succeeding General John A. Dix) he was the editor of The Northern Light. Perhaps it would be correct to say that his rank among American poets is the same as that generally assigned to Dryden among English poets,—one of the first of the second class. As a descriptive poet, Dr. Griswold (Poets and Poetry, &c.) doubted if he had a superior in America. Poe, (Marginalia, cxxiv.,) whilst remarking that "as a descriptive poet Mr. Street is to be highly commended," complains that "he appears, however, not at any time to have been aware that mere description is not poetry at all."

His poem of The Settler has been translated into German; and The Lost Hunter, and other poems of his, have been illustrated both in America and England.

He has ready for the press a sequel to Woods and Waters, entitled Lake and Mountain, or Autumn in the Adirondacks; and Eagle Pine, or Sketches of a New York Frontier Village.

To these volumes should be added Nos. 10, 14, and 17; Historical Memoirs of the Queens of England, (see LAWRENCE, MISS H.;) Dr. Doran's Lives of the Queens of England of the House of Hanover, 2 vols. p. 8vo, 1855, 3d ed., 1861, and his Memoir of Queen Adelaide, Consort of King William IV., 1861, p. 8vo; Queens of England and their Times, by Francis Lancecott, 1857, 2 vols. p. 8vo: The Lives of the Princesses of England, (see GREEN, MRS. MARY ANNE EVERETT, No. 2;) Lives of British Queens, (see HOWITT, MARY, No. 12;) Lives of the Kings of England, (see ROSCOE, THOMAS, No. 21;) Memoirs of Royal Ladies, by Emily Sarah Holt, 1861, 2 vols. p. 8vo, (censured by Lon. Athen., 1861, i. 658;) Life and Letters of Arabella Stuart, by Elizabeth Cooper, 1866, 2 vols. cr. 8vo. For the copyright of The Queens, Miss Strickland was paid £2000: it was sold in May, 1857, for £6900, (see Lon. Pub. Circ., June 1, 1857, 229.) She has since repurchased this, and a number of copyrights of her works. We have before us many commendatory notices of this important publication: M. Guizot pronounces it "a charming work,—full of interest, at once serious and pleasing;" and the London Times declares it to possess "the fascination of a romance united to the integrity of history." On the other hand, portions of it have been censured as unduly laudatory of the Stuarts and unjustly abusive of their opponents. The Edinburgh Reviewer remarks,

"It is with the tone of Miss Strickland's observations upon individual character that we think we have a right to find fault. There is scarcely a conspicuous defender of her principles upon whose faults she has had the courage to do justice, nor a leader of the opposite party to whose merits she has had the generosity to give due honour. . . . We need not point out how entirely such faults as those which we have thus briefly noticed must deprive the work in which they occur of all real historical value."—April, 1849, 437, 461: Miss Strickland's Queens of England: Stuart Series.

"The writings of this lady," comments the Quarterly Reviewer, "notwithstanding a pervading poverty of style and an equally pervading feebleness of thought, and notwithstanding the graver faults of frequent inaccuracy and almost constant partiality, are by no means without their use. . . . If not always a safe guide herself, she is at least useful as directing the reader to better and more trustworthy authorities."—July, 1854, art. vii.: Lives of the Queens of England, &c.

"Miss Strickland's interesting volumes are particularly valuable to the historian for the copious extracts which they contain from curious unpublished documents which had escaped the notice of writers too exclusively occupied with political events to give much heed to details of a domestic and personal nature."—W. H. PRESCOTT: Hist. of the Reign of Philip II., 1856, i. 125, n.

Strype has long maintained an unimpeachable reputation as one of the driest and most veracious of annalists, or rather copyists. His latter claim to distinction has been recently challenged by Dr. S. Stuart, Gilbert, LL.D., the son of George Stuart, Professor of Humanity in the University of Edinburgh, was b. at Edinburgh, 1742; d. at his father's house at Musselburgh, 1786. He has already been noticed, not much to his honour, in our article on Henry, Robert, (p. 826, supra;) and more than most readers will care to know about such a sot, grumbler, scold, and literary Ishmaelite will be found in the authorities cited below. Of his grumbling and scolding here is a choice specimen:

"It is my constant fate to be disappointed in every thing I attempt: I do not think I ever had a wish that was gratified, and never dreaded an event that did not come. . . . I mortally detest and abhor this place [Edinburgh] and everybody in it. . . A curse on the country, and all the men, women, and children of it. . . . The publication is too good for the country."—Letter, June 17, 1774.

The last sentence enables us to interpret the objurgation which precedes it. The "too good publication" was the violently abusive Edinburgh Magazine and Review, (see Smellie, William,) which with a moderate share of decency might have succeeded very well. How he worried poor Dr. Henry we have already shown; how he attacked Dr. Robertson (in Nos. 5 and 7, infra) will be seen by a reference to Lord Brougham's Life of that great historian, (Men of Letters of the Time of George III., ed. 1855, 274–77,) and other authorities, (infra.) Stuart's complaint that he never "had a wish that was gratified" was, unfortunately, ill grounded: his "wish" for strong potations was "gratified" so often that his bodily powers sunk under the unequal conflict. This prominent member of the genus irritabile (see p. 175, supra) possessed abilities which under happier auspices would have greatly benefited the world,—which under unhappy auspices produced works of no inconsiderable value. He published the following:

1. Historical Dissertation concerning the Antiquity of the British Constitution, Edin., 1768, 8vo; 2d ed., Lon., 1770, 8vo; 1771, 8vo; 1776, 1778, 4to; 1790, 8vo. Rewarded by the degree of LL.D. from the University of Edinburgh.

"Here the author has made a great, and indeed a splendid, effort to eclipse the reputation of Robertson, whom he both envied and hated. As the one historian considered Mary guilty of some of the foulest crimes laid to her charge, it was almost an obvious consequence that the other should represent her as innocent."—Dr. Irving: ubi supra.

There is a translation into French, by L. Feuillet, with additions, of Stuart's and Revett's 4 vols., Paris, 1808–24, 4 vols. fol., to which is added a Supp. vol. in French, translated from the English of W. Wilkins, with Notes by J. J. Hittorff, 1832, large fol. See Brunet's Man., 5th ed., v., 1864, 570.

There is also a useful little hand-book, called The Antiquities of Athens, and other Monuments of Greece, with 70 plates, reduced from the work of Stuart and Revett, &c., of which the 2d ed. was pub. by Bogue, 1841, sq. 16mo, and the 3d in 1858, p. 8vo, (Bohn's Illust. Stuart, Moses, one of the most eminent of modern philologists, and the father of Biblical Science in America, the son of a farmer, was born at Wilton, Conn., March 26, 1780; graduated at Yale College, 1799, and subsequently taught school at North Fairfield, Conn., and at Danbury; was admitted to the Bar at Danbury, 1802; Tutor at Yale College, 1802–1804; licensed to preach by the New Haven Association of Ministers, 1804; ordained pastor of a church in New Haven, Conn., succeeding Dr. James Dana, March 5, 1806; here remained until inaugurated Professor of Sacred Literature in the Theological Seminary at Andover, Feb. 28, 1810, and retained this post until 1848, when "he resigned, in consequence of the infirmities of advancing age;" d. Jan. 4, 1852. Of his principal publications—almost all of which have from the first maintained a high reputation at home and abroad—the following is a chronological catalogue. 1. Grammar of the Hebrew Language, without Points, Andover, 8vo, 1813. 2. Letters to the Rev. W. E. Channing, containing Remarks on his Sermon at Baltimore, (see CHANNING, WILLIAM ELLERY, D.D.,) 8vo, 1819. The first ed. was exhausted within a week, and two other edits. soon followed. Repub.: Belfast, 12mo, 1825, (some 1826;) Aberd., 12mo, 1834; 12mo, 1839; also in Christian Treasury, (and pub. separately,) Lon., r. 8vo, 1844. See No. 24. This vol. elicited a Letter to Professor Stuart, in Answer to his Letters to W. E. Channing, Bost., 8vo, 1819; and A Few Remarks, &c., by a Layman, s. a., 8vo. See notices of Stuart's Letters in Chris. Month. Spec., iii. 425; Chris. Disc., i. 316, 370; Lowndes's Brit. Lib., 720. 3. Grammar of the Hebrew Language, [with Points,] with a Copious Syntax and Praxis, Andover, 8vo, 1821; 2d ed., 8vo, 1823, (some 1824:) in this ed. he was assisted by Edward Robinson, D.D., (supra;) 3d ed., 8vo, 1828, (some 1829;) Phila., 8vo, 1830; 4th ed., 8vo, Andover, 1831, Oxf., 1831, (some 1832;) 5th ed., 8vo, Andover, 1835, Oxford, 1838; 6th ed., 8vo, Andover and London. Dr. Nicol, late Regius Professor of Hebrew at Oxford, commended this as the best Hebrew Grammar extant; and the 4th ed. was repub. by the recommendation of his successor, Dr. E. B. Pusey. "If candour, integrity of purpose, and apostolic piety, united to deep research, persevering industry, and varied erudition, could qualify any man for the task of translating and expounding critically the most difficult of the Pauline Epistles, we believe that Professor Stuart possesses these endowments. . . . Mr. Stuart is original both in his translations and his comments. He at one time objects to Calvin, at another to Arminius; and we do not think that any partisan will have reason to quarrel with the professor for a blind adherence to any 'set of opinions.'"—Brit. Critic, Oct. 1833, 430, 431.

"As an exhibition of the doctrine of the epistle, Dr. Hodge's Commentary [new ed., Phila., 1864, 8vo] far surpasses Dr. Stuart's, and, indeed, surpasses any thing with which we are acquainted in the English language."—C. P. KRAUTH, JR., D.D.: (Phila.) Lutheran, June 30, 1864.

"To Andover, under the lead of the veteran Stuart, belongs the honor of having opened the rich treasures of German literature and theology to the American, if not to the English, world."—Evangel. Rev., July, 1862, 151. See, also, July, 1863, 466, (by W. B. Sprague, D.D.)

"Moses Stuart had the sagacity to discover the value of the German as the source of the best weapons for the defence of the faith. He had a yet greater merit,—he had the moral courage to stand up in defence of the literature he prized. . . . The apparently irresistible evidence of the reality and value of his discoveries did not remove all prejudice at once,—for the irresistible, as is well known, always has a serious time when it encounters the irresistible. . . . Things have greatly changed since then. Many of the class of men of which we speak are as ignorant as ever, but they have the grace no longer to boast of it."—C. P. KRAUTH, JR., D.D.: Lutheran, &c., Oct. 16, 1862.

As regards "various readings," the following testimony to the substantial correctness of our authorized version is too valuable to be omitted:

"Out of some eight hundred thousand various readings of the Bible that have been collated, about seven hundred and ninety-five thousand are of just about as much importance to the sense of the Greek and Hebrew Scriptures as the question in English orthography is, whether the word honour shall be spelled with a u or without it. Of the remainder, some change the sense of particular passages or expressions, or omit particular words or phrases; but no one doctrine of religion is changed, not one precept is taken away, not one important fact is altered, by the whole of the various readings collectively taken."—MOSES STUART.

"The great work of Professor Stuart was that of redeeming theology from an iron-handed metaphysics, disenthralling the free meaning of the Bible from slavery to an artificial logic."—EDWARDS A. PARK, D.D.: Funeral Sermon on Professor Stuart.

"Mr. Stuart's vocation was to call back the Bible, the genuine original Bible, in its true interpretation, into the Theology of the Anglo-Saxons. This great work he did,—nobly and effectually accomplished it; and it was task enough for any one man."—CALVIN STOWE, D.D., Sept. 1, 1854: Sprague's Annals, ut supra

"The first characteristic of Professor Stuart as a commentator is the exhaustive thoroughness of his labors. He leaves no question with regard to the external history of the book under treatment without full discussion; makes a fair statement of all tenable theories; enters into the derivation, affinities, and assignable significations of every important word; and inserts or appends dissertations, or, as he prefers to call them, excursus, on every point of difficult decision and on the bearings of every salient phase of doctrine and opinion. He is also unrammelled by traditions, and never shrinks from avowing his honest belief when it departs from the standard of critical orthodoxy or diminishes the weight of argument for his own theological dogmas. His exegesis is in general skilful and felicitous, especially in bringing out the meaning of obscure passages and adding new and delicate shades of thought to the obvious and more superficial sense; but it is sometimes too refined and subtile, attaching to a word or sentence a signification which presupposes in the author a philological taste kindred to his own. His style has some marked faults, and perhaps no distinctive excellence. He is prolix, is fond of unusual and learned words, and mingles too freely with his English diction words and phrases from the Latin and Greek."—A. P. PEABODY, D.D.: N. Amer Rev., April, 1862, 560.

"Moses Stuart, with all his versatility, became a rich blessing to the churches, by training their preachers in the more thorough study of the whole truth, as revealed with open face in the inspired word."—HENRY B. SMITH, D.D., (of the Union Theological Seminary, N. York:) Amer. Theol. Rev., Jan. 1862, 49, (The Theological System of Emmons.)

"More than seventy of his pupils have been the presidents or professors of our highest literary institutions; more than a hundred, missionaries to the heathen; and about thirty of them have been engaged in translating the Bible into foreign languages."—J. about 1600. He wrote an answer (said to be able) to Cardinal Allen's Defence of the English Catholics, but is best known by The Discoverie of a Gaping Gulf, wherein England is like to be swallowed by another French Marriage, &c., 1579, sm. 8vo, (Bindley, Pt. 1, 1733, £5 7s. 6d.:) against the alliance of Queen Elizabeth with the Duke of Anjou, (see SIDNEY, SIR PHILIP.) For this patriotic act his right hand was cut off with a butcher's knife and mallet: Page, the publisher or disperser of the pamphlet, was rewarded in the same manner. See Masters's Hist. of C. C. C. C.; Churton's Nowell; Strype's Grindal; Camden's Annals of Q. Elizabeth, anno 1581; Park's Harrington's Nugæ Antiquæ, 1804, i. 143, 149, 154, &c.

Stubbes, Stubbs, or Stubs, Philip, a kinsman of the preceding, is described by Wood (Athen. Oxon., Bliss's ed., i. 646) as "a most rigid Calvinist, a bitter enemy to popery, and a great corrector of the vices and abuses of his time; and though not in sacred orders," he continues, "yet the books he wrote related to divinity and morality." He was educated at Cambridge and Oxford. Referring to Wood for his other publications, we shall only notice: The Anatomie of Abuses, Lon., 1583, 4to; 2d ed., 1583, 4to; again, 1584, 8vo, (in J. Lilly's Cat., Nov.–Dec. 1857, pp. 78–79, £5 5s.; and in his Bibl. Anglo-Curiosa, 1869, 127, £10 10s.;) 3d ed., 1585: reprinted under the superintendence of W. B. D. D. Turnbull, Esq., Advocate, 1836, 8vo: 100 copies. 4th ed., 1595, 4to. Bindley, Pt. 3, 1856, £9 9s.; Sotheby's, Mar. 1862, £6. The second Part of the Anatomie of Abuses, 1583, 8vo; 1583, 16mo. A Selection from his Works, with Life of the Author and Remarks on his Writings and Genius, by the Rev. Alfred Suckling, Lon., r. 8vo, 1836.

"As a writer, Sir John Suckling will command admiration so long as a taste for whatever is delicate and natural in poetry shall remain. His works are the production of a genius truly poetic and original; his language is animated and forcible; his versification, for the age, smooth and flowing; the structure of his stanzas is simple, and occasionally novel,—founded apparently, in some instances, on Italian models. In descriptions of feminine grace and beauty he is peculiarly happy, and in his prose compositions is clear, nervous, and sparkling.

"If we bring his poems to the test of comparison with succeeding writers, notwithstanding the continued progress of elegant literature since his day, the result will prove that in the lighter species of poetry he remains unrivalled. Had his name been unknown in any other department of literature, or unaccompanied with any historical associations, his ballads and songs alone would render his fame imperishable. In his prose compositions Suckling has been equally admired; his letters are full of wit, spirit, and gallantry, and have been rarely surpassed. His 'Account of Religion by Reason' and his letters to Mr. Jermyn prove his ability to reason with closeness and compose with nervous elegance."—Extracts from the Editor's Preface.

"Considering the manner of writing then in fashion, the purity of Sir John Suckling's style is quite surprising."—DR. LOCKIER, Dean of Peterborough.

"The grace and elegance of his songs and ballads are inimitable."—GEORGE ELLIS: Specimens.

"Sir John Suckling is acknowledged to have left far behind him all former writers of song in gaiety and ease; it is not equally clear that he has ever since been surpassed. His poetry aims at no higher praise; he shows no sentiment or imagination, either because he had them not, or because he did not require either in the style he chose. . . . Suckling's Epithalamium, though not written for those 'Qui Musas colitis severiores,' has been read by almost all the world, and is a matchless piece of liveliness and facility."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, Part 3, ch. v., sec. 56, and n.

"His 'Ballad on a Wedding' is his masterpiece, and is indeed unrivalled in that class of composition for the voluptuous delicacy of the sentiments and the luxuriant richness of the images. . . . Suckling's Letters are full of habitual good sense. . . . His peculiar powers deserted him in attempting dramatic dialogue." —HAZLITT: Lects. on the Eng. Comic Writers, Lect. III.

His songs "When, dearest, I but think of thee," and "Tell me, ye juster Deities," are among his best compositions.

Summerfield, John, b. at Preston, Lancashire, Jan. 31, 1798, became a local preacher among the Methodists, April, 1818; emigrated to New York, March 17, 1821, and preached to large audiences until early in June, 1822, when his ministrations were suspended by the failure of his health; left New York, Dec. 25, 1822, travelled in France and England, and returned to New York, April 19, 1824, and d. there, June 13, 1825. He was very famous as a pulpit-orator: yet James Montgomery, the poet, who read some of his discourses in MS., observed, "The sermons are less calculated for instantaneous effect than for abiding usefulness." A Discourse on behalf of the New York Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb, 1822, was the only production which he published: after his death appeared (83) Sermons and Sketches of Sermons by Rev. John Summerfield, A.M., with an Introduction by Rev. Thomas E. Bond, M.D., N. York, 1842, 8vo, pp. 437. Sumner, Bradford, a native of Taunton, Mass., graduated at Brown University, 1808, was a tutor in that institution, 1809–11, and subsequently became a counsellor-at-law at Boston. 1. Oration, July 4, 1828, Bost., 1828, 8vo. 2. Address before the Massachusetts Peace Society, 1831, 1831, 8vo.

Sumner, Charles, LL.D., son of Charles Pinckney Sumner, (infra,) was b. in Boston, Jan. 6, 1811; fitted for college at the Boston Latin School, and graduated at Harvard, 1830; entered the Law School at Cambridge, 1831, was admitted to the Bar at Worcester in the same year, and commenced practice at Boston, 1834, when he was appointed Reporter of the Circuit Court: delivered lectures to the law-students at Cambridge, 1835, '36, '37, '43, (see Story's Life and Letters, ii. 189, 215, 281, 297, 430,) but declined overtures for the successorship to Judge Story's chair, after his decease; travelled in Europe in 1837–40, '57, '58; succeeded Daniel Webster as United States Senator, 1851, and still (1870) occupies that position. Before his admission to the Bar he became the chief editor of the American Jurist, and contributed to it, among other papers, a valuable article on Legal Bibliography, (in vol. xii.: see Wallace's Reporters, 3d ed., 1855, 6;) as Librarian of the Harvard Law Library, he prepared a Catalogue of the Books in that institution, 1834, 8vo, pp. 228; he edited, with Appendix and Indexes, Andrew Dunlap's Treatise on the Practice of the Courts of Admiralty in Civil Causes of Maritime Jurisdiction, Phila., 1836, 8vo, (see N. Amer.

Rev., xlvi. 72, by G. S. Hillard;) as Reporter, he published Reports of Cases Argued and Determined in the Circuit Court of the United States for the First Circuit, from May Term, 1829, to May Term, 1839, Bost., 3 vols. 8vo, 1836–41; 2d ed., 1848–49–51, (see 16 Leg. Obs., 414; 3 Law Rep., 403; GALLISON, JOHN; STORY, JOSEPH, LL.D.;) and, in conjunction with J. C. Perkins, edited Vesey Jr.'s (see VESEY, FRANCIS, JR.) Chancery Reports, 1844–45, 20 vols. 8vo, (see Story's Life and Letters, ii. 474.) To these important services are to be added an able defence (written in Paris at the request of Governor Lewis Cass, and published in Galignani's Messenger, &c.) of the American Claim in the North-Eastern Boundary controversy with England, and the suggestion to Mr. Wheaton of a work on the Law of Nations,—since carried into effect by the well-known treatise (see WHEATON, HENRY, LL.D., No. 10) of the latter gentleman. Having thus discharged the debt which every lawyer is said, on high authority, to owe to his profession, Mr. Sumner has felt at liberty to devote all the treasures of his learning and all the vigour of his eloquence to the promotion of universal freedom in America, and the spread of peace, justice, and truth among all nations. Perhaps the best-known of his orations, addresses, and speeches are the following: 1. The True Grandeur of Nations, July 4, 1845, Bost., 1845, 8vo; 2d ed., 1845, pp. 96; Phila., 1847, 8vo. 5 or 6 edits., at least, were pub. in London. See N. Amer. Rev., lxi. 518; Chris. Exam., xxxix. 437; Story's Life and Letters, ii. 543; Griswold's Prose Writers of America, 4th ed., 1852, 43. Also highly commended by Chancellor Kent, Rogers the poet, Chambers's Edin. Jour., &c. 2. The Scholar, the Jurist, the Artist, the Philanthropist, Aug. 27, 1846, 2d ed., Bost., 1846, 8vo, pp. 72. Commemorative of Pickering, Story, Allston, and Channing. See N. Amer. Rev., lxiv. 254. Commended by J. Q. Adams, Chancellor Kent, &c. 3. Fame and Glory, Aug. 11, 1847, 1847, 8vo. See Bost. Liv. Age, xvii. 415, (from Chambers's Edin. Jour.:) Sumner on True Glory. 4. White Slavery in the Barbary States, 1847, 1847, 8vo. He subsequently published a small volume with the same title, 1853, 12mo, new ed., 12mo, which was commended in Westm. Rev., July, 1853, Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1853, 455, and Lon. Athen., 1853, 475. 5. Law of Human Progress, 1848, 1848, 8vo. 6. The War System of the Commonwealth of Nations, May 28, 1849, 1849, 8vo, pp. 71. Commended by Lon. "We have in our possession many of Mr. Sumner's speeches; and we confess that, for depth and accuracy of thought, for fullness of historical information, and for a species of gigantic morality which treads all sophistry under foot and rushes at once to the right conclusion, we know not a single orator, speaking the English tongue, who ranks as his superior."—Edin. Jour.

"May I suggest to you to purchase, read, and study two volumes just published, of Charles Sumner's Orations and Speeches? You will find them full of the most noble views and inspiring sentiments. I could ask a young man, just entering public life, nothing better than to form his conduct after the high models there presented."—HORACE MANN, Washington, Dec. 1850.

We select these as specimens of the many eulogies of a similar character, from foreign and domestic authorities, which now lie before us.

"The Hon. Charles Sumner has recently presented to the library of Harvard College a collection of valuable pamphlets, making in all more than 400 volumes. This is no new thing for Mr. Sumner to do. For a long series of years Mr. Sumner has been a benefactor of the library, and within five years he has given to it more than 7000 pamphlets and 1000 volumes, among which are many of great value, which could not have been otherwise procured."—Oct. 1867.

Sumner, Charles Pinckney, father of the preceding, and son of Major Job Sumner, a distinguished officer of the Revolutionary Army, was b. at Milton, Mass., Jan. 20, 1776; graduated at Harvard College, 1796, and subsequently studied law under the guidance of Josiah Quincy; appointed High-Sheriff of the County of Suffolk, 1825, and retained this post by successive appointments until his resignation, a few days before his decease, which occurred April 24, 1839. 1. Discourse on some Points of Difference between the Sheriff's Office in Massachusetts and in England, 1829, 8vo. Originally pub. in Amer. Jurist, vol. ii., 1829.

"It is a valuable production, both in a historical and judicial point."—Loring's Hundred Boston Orators, 330, (q. v. for a notice of Mr. Sumner.)

Sumner, Charles Richard, D.D., youngest brother of Archbishop John Bird Sumner, (infra,) was b. at Kenilworth, Warwickshire, 1790; educated at Eton, and Trinity College, Cambridge, and became Rector of Abingdon, Bucks, and Librarian and Historiographer to George IV.; Preb. of Worcester, 1822; Preb. of Canterbury, 1825; Dean of St. Paul's, Preb. of London, and Bishop of Llandaff, all in April, 1826; trans. to Winchester, 1827; resigned his see, on account of the infirmities of age, Sept. 1869. 1. There has been recently issued: John Milton: a Vindication, especially from the Charge of Arianism, by J. W. Morris, Lon., 1862, 12mo. See Lon. Athen., 1862, i. 627. Since we wrote our article on Milton, other MSS. found in the packet discovered by Mr. Lemon have been printed, in a volume entitled Original Papers illustrative of the Life and Writings of John Milton; including Sixteen Letters of State written by Him: Now first Published from MSS. in the State Paper Office, by W. Douglas Hamilton, Lon., 1859, sm. 4to, (Camden Soc.) See Lon. Athen., 1859, ii. 810; Lon. Critic, 1860, 108.

Sumner, George, Professor of Botany at Trinity College, Hartford, was b. at Pomfret, Conn., Dec. 19, 1793; graduated at Yale College, 1813, and M.D. at Philadelphia, 1817; settled at Hartford, 1819; d. Feb. 20, 1855. Compendium of Physiological and Systematic Botany, Hartford, 1820, 12mo.

Sumner, George, son of Charles Pinckney Sumner, (supra,) was b. in Boston, Feb. 5, 1817; studied at Heidelberg and Berlin, and resided many years abroad, occupied in travelling in Europe, Asia, and Africa,—devoting especial attention to international laws, and to the codes, politics, institutions, and philanthropic organizations of each country. He d. at Boston, Oct. 6, 1863. As an author, he was favourably known by articles in French, German, and English periodicals, (Journal des Débats, Allgemeine Zeitung, North American Review, Democratic Review, &c.,) some of which have been published in several languages, and by a number of valuable monographs. We notice the following: 1. Memoirs of the Pilgrims at Leyden; an Address delivered at Cambridge, Mass., 1845, pub. in Mass. Hist. Soc. Coll., vol. ix., 3d Series.

"A more accurate research than was ever before made has been instituted by our ingenious countryman, Mr. George Sumner, into the condition of the Pilgrims at Leyden."—EDWARD EVERETT: Orations and Speeches, ii. 484.

2. The Pennsylvania System of Prison-Discipline Triumphant in France, Phila., 1847, 8vo; again, 1851. 1st ed. was printed as a Boston City Document, 1847. The "triumph" of this system in Europe is partially owing to Mr. Sumner's zealous and intelligent advocacy of it. 3. An Address on the Progress of Reform in France, 1853. 4. An Oration delivered before the Municipal Authorities of the City of Boston, July 4, 1859, Bost., 1859, 8vo, pp. 67; 3d ed., 1859.

"This is an admirable address,—simple in style, large in thought, mighty in matter, and moderate in tone."—E. P. WHIPPLE: N. Amer. Rev., Oct. 1859, 558.

See, also, Hist. Mag., 1859, 323.

The Opinione, the leading journal of Turin, declared the Oration to be "nobly generous to Italy,—honourable to Boston and to America."

The New York edition of Lamartine's History of the Girondists contains a reply by Mr. Sumner to the author's attack on the United States.

In Proceed. Mass. Hist. Soc., 1858–60, 422, will be found a Letter of Mr. Sumner's to the poet Longfellow on the character of Washington Irving. The following has since been published:

"George Sumner has been twice up here. . . . I really was heartily glad to meet him again; for he is altogether one of the most curiously instructed American travellers that I have ever met with."—WASHINGTON IRVING: Sunnyside, Sept. 20, 1852: Life and Letters, iv. (1864) 119.

Although known to be a zealous defender of American institutions, Mr. Sumner was often consulted by foreign Governments on questions of political economy; and publicists, statists, and statisticians of all countries were made welcome to the valuable results of his intelligent cosmopolitism.

"Mr. Sumner is a man of superior intelligence, very accomplished, perfectly familiar with all European affairs, and knowing the different parties and politics of Europe much better than any European with whom I am acquainted."—ALEXIS C. H. C. DE TOCQUEVILLE: Letter to General Cavaignac.

"I accept his researches with confidence; for I have verified the precision and accuracy which he brings to all labours."—BARON F. H. ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT.

See, also, Humboldt's Letter to Sumner, Paris, May 19, 1845.

"The emperor Nicholas reposed more confidence in him for information on this country than on any other American."—Loring's Hundred Boston Orators, 1854, 332, (q. v.)

With such disqualifications for political favour, and the additional misfortune of familiarity with foreign tongues, we need not marvel that he was never invited to represent his Government at a French, German, or Russian court.

But at home, among the people, as well as abroad, Mr. Sumner's oral instructions were highly valued: from November 1 to March 15, 1860, he gave no less than one hundred and two lectures in cities and towns of the United States. To his labours, in conjunction with those of Dr. S. G. Howe, we owe the establishment in America of Schools for Idiots. His Essay on the subject, first printed in the Legislature of Massachusetts, was published in French (in Annales de la Charité) at Paris and in Italian at Turin.

Supple, Mark, the famous parliamentary reporter for the Morning Chronicle, published a great many good speeches, avowedly by members, but really by himself; and therefore we give him a place in a Dictionary of Authors. He once upset the gravity of the House by calling for "A song from Mr. Speaker [Addington.]"

Surtees, Robert, b. at Durham, 1779, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford, where he became B.A. 1800, M.A. 1803, after less than two years' experience at the Middle Temple, in 1802 established himself on his paternal estate at Mainsforth, Durham, and there remained, engaged in antiquarian pursuits, until his death, Feb. 11, 1834. A short obituary notice of him, by Robert Southey, was published in Lon. Gent. Mag., 1834, i. 440; a Memoir of him, by George Taylor, Esq., of Witton-le-Wear, was prefixed to vol. iv. of the History of Durham, infra, and this was republished, with Additions, in 1852, 8vo: see RAINE, JAMES, No. 4. The Surtees Society, (named after this author,) there referred to, has now published (Durham, 1835–70) 52 vols. 8vo. See Lon. Gent. "Mr. Surtees's labours are not only far in advance of those of Hutchinson, but they are in important respects different from those of Dr. Whitaker. . . . Mr. Surtees's work will ever be considered as a model for works of this nature."—Lon. Gent. Mag., 1853, ii. 148: Raine's History of North Durham.

Raine's History (see RAINE, JAMES, No. 3) must accompany Surtees's History. Vols. i., ii., and iii. were reviewed by Robert Southey (see his Life and Corresp., ch. xxxi.) in Lon. Quar. Rev., xxxix. (April, 1829) 360–405; and he styles the History an "elaborate and very valuable work." In his obituary notice of Surtees (ubi supra) he refers to it as "a great work, which must always be consulted by those who study the ancient history of England, and the institutions and manners of their forefathers."

"One of the most learned as well as interesting works of its class."—J. G. LOCKHART: Life of Scott, ch. xx., n.

Swift, Jonathan, D.D., November 30, 1667–October 19, 1745, a descendant of an ancient Yorkshire family, was the grandson of the Rev. Thomas Swift, Vicar of Goodrich, Herefordshire, (husband of Elizabeth Dryden, aunt of Dryden the poet,) and the son of Jonathan Swift, Steward of the King's Inns, Dublin, "that renowned city," remarks our author, "where (absit invidia) I had the honour to draw my first breath;" an event which occurred seven months after his father's death.

"As to my native country," writes Swift, on another occasion, "I happened, indeed, by a perfect accident to be born here, my mother being left here from returning to her house at Leicester; and I was a year old before I was sent to England; and thus I am a Teague, or an Irishman, or what people please, although the best part of my life was in England."—Letter to Mr. Grant, March 23, 1733–4: Scott's Swift, xviii. 203.

It will be observed that this statement is not altogether candid. With what propriety a birth in a place of permanent family residence is called, in Swift's sense, "a perfect accident," it is difficult to determine. Nor does the Dean speak more truly when he alleges that he was "sent to England when a year old." He was stolen to England by his too affectionate nurse, who returned to her home at Whitehaven, by request of a dying relative, bearing with her a charge too precious to be left behind. Rather than permit the child to run the hazard of a second voyage, the mother consented to let him remain where he was for nearly three years, after which period he was restored to her in Dublin. But we are sorry to say that this was not the only fiction of which the unwilling Irishman was guilty upon this to him unwelcome theme.

"Dr. Swift," remarks one of his most intimate and valued friends, "has told me that he was born in the town of Leicester, and that his father was minister of a parish in Herefordshire."—POPE: Spence, Singer's ed., 1820, 161.

When dissatisfied with Ireland, he would often exclaim, "I am not of this vile country; I am an Englishman." Yet at times he was known to point out the very house (No. 7 Hoey's Court) in Dublin where he first drew breath. But he certainly did not consider that this "perfect accident" deprived him of the right to call himself an Englishman.

"I may observe," says a late eminent historian, "that, to the best of my belief, Swift never, in any thing that he wrote, used the word Irishman to denote a person of Anglo-Saxon race born in Ireland. He no more considered himself as an Irishman, than an Englishman born at Calcutta considers himself as a Hindoo."—LORD MACAULAY: Hist. of England, iii. ch. xvii., n.

At six years of age Swift was placed at school at Kilkenny, and on the 24th of April, 1682, was received as pensioner of Trinity College, Dublin, where he probably had a scholarship, as he remained there until 1688, when, on the breaking out of the Rebellion, he emigrated to Leicester, where his mother had for some years lived on the charity of her English relations. In Ireland, after the death of her husband, her family (Swift, and a daughter, a little older than himself,—afterwards Mrs Fenton,—were her only children) had been dependent upon her two brothers-in-law, Godwin and William Swift, both settled in that country. At college Swift distinguished himself indeed, but it was by the contempt of rules, defiance of authorities, neglect of studies, and the consequent penalties and censures with which these grave offences were visited. It was only speciali gratia that, February 15, 1685, he received the degree of Bachelor of Arts.

Among the English relations of his mother was the wife of Sir William Temple; and in a few months after Swift's arrival in Leicester this connection led to the reception of the youth in the great man's family, in the capacity of secretary to the retired statesman. Here, for the first two years at least, his position was not the most pleasant that can be imagined:

"An eccentric, uncouth, disagreeable young Irishman, who had narrowly escaped plucking at Dublin, attended Sir William as an amanuensis, for board and twenty pounds a year; dined at the second table, wrote bad verses in praise of his employer, and made love to a very pretty dark-eyed young girl who waited Lady Giffard. Little did Temple imagine that the coarse exterior of his dependent concealed a genius equally suited to politics and to letters,—a genius destined to shake great kingdoms, to stir the laughter and the rage of millions, and to leave to posterity memorials which can perish only with the English language. Little did he think that the flirtation in his servants' hall, which he perhaps scarcely deigned to make the subject of a jest, was the beginning of a long unprosperous love which was to be as widely famed as the passion of Petrarch or of Abelard. Sir William's secretary was Jonathan Swift, Lady Giffard's waiting-maid was poor Stella."—LORD MACAULAY: Life and Writings of Sir William Temple: Edin. Rev., Oct. 1838, 178: repub. in his Essays.

"His spirit had been bowed down, and might seem to have been broken, by calamities and humiliations. The language which he was in the habit of holding to his patron, as far as we can judge from the specimens which still remain, was that of a lackey, or rather of a beggar. [Note: See Swift's Letter to Temple of Oct. 6, 1694.] A sharp word or a cold look of the master sufficed to make the servant miserable during several days. [Note: Journal to Stella, Letter XIX.] But this tameness was merely the tameness with which a tiger, caught, caged, and starved, submits to the keeper who brings him food. The humble menial was at heart the haughtiest, the most aspiring, the most vindictive, the most despotic, of men."—LORD MACAULAY: Hist. of Eng., iv. ch. xix.

"It was at Shene and at Moor Park, with a salary of twenty pounds and a dinner at the upper servants' table, that this great and lonely Swift passed a ten years' apprenticeship—worn a cassock that was only not a livery—bent down a knee as proud as Lucifer's to supplicate my lady's good graces or run on his honour's errands. It was here, as he was writing at Temple's table, or following his patron's walk, that he saw and heard the men who had governed the great world,—measured himself with them, looking up from his silent cover, gauged their brains, weighed their wits, turned them, and tried them, and marked them. Ah, what platitudes he must have heard! what feeble jokes! what pompous commonplaces! what small men they must have seemed, under those enormous periwigs, to the swarthy, uncouth, silent Irish secretary. I wonder whether it ever struck Temple that that Irishman was his master? I suppose that dismal conviction did not present itself under the ambrosial wig, or Temple could never have lived with Swift. Swift sickened, rebelled, left the service, ate humble pie and came back again; and so for ten years went on, gathering learning, swallowing scorn, and submitting with a stealthy rage to his fortune."—THACKERAY: English Humourists of the Eighteenth Century: a Series of Lectures: Swift.

See, also, his Lecture on Charity and Humour, appended to N. York ed. of his Lectures. We have allowed this lively raconteur to anticipate the regular course of our narrative. Installed as secretary, Swift devoted himself to study, and soon acquired a large stock of historical information and some knowledge of the Greek and Latin classics.

After about two years' residence with Sir William, he made a short visit to Ireland for the benefit of his health: "a surfeit of stone-fruit" (such is his explanation) had resulted in attacks of giddiness and other disorders, from which he suffered, more or less, to the end of his days.

On his return to Moor Park he was pleased to find himself treated with more consideration by a patron who had been taught the value of his company by its temporary deprivation. King William's fondness for Temple's society brought him frequently to the Park, and he took enough notice of the scribe to arouse ambitious hopes which the monarch never took the pains to gratify. He, however, taught the secretary how to cut and eat asparagus (of which the sovereign seems to have been as fond as he was of "green peas") in the Dutch manner, a lesson which the Dean, in more prosperous days, was not unwilling to rehearse for the benefit of his oft-instructed guests,—and offered him the captaincy of a troop of horse,—an honour which was not accepted. After Swift had taken orders, William promised Temple that the divine should have a prebend of Canterbury or Westminster; but with the death of the patron died all the monarch's interest in the dependant.

In 1692 Swift entered himself of Hart Hall, Oxford, for the purpose of taking his degree of M.A., which he received on July 4th of that year. Shortly afterwards he left Sir William's roof, after a cold parting from that gentleman; October 18, 1694, he was admitted to deacon's orders; January 13, 1695, he took priest's orders; and the prebend of Kilroot, in the diocese of Connor, Ireland, bestowed by Lord Capel, enabled him to enter upon the duties of the pastorate. In the same year, (1695,) however, at the request of Temple, he again took up his residence at Moor Park, and there remained until the death of the former, January 27, 1698. He left his companion a legacy and any profit which might arise from the publication of his posthumous works,—which Swift gave to the world, London, 1700–3, 3 vols. 8vo. We have not yet, however, done with Moor Park: it was here during his second term of residence) that he contracted an intimacy which exercised a powerful influence upon the future lives of himself, the object of his attentions, and a later admirer of his shining parts. Miss Esther Johnson, better known as Stella, resided with her mother, a companion of Lady Giffard, (Sir William Temple's sister,) at Moor Park. The secretary (he was in 1695 about thirty, his pupil thirteen) directed her studies, and soon taught her the art to love. Her future history will be found detailed at length by the biographers of Swift. Suffice it here to say that, after many years of painful experience of the peculiarities of her strange lover, she died in Dublin, January 28, 1728. It has been generally supposed that she was privately married to Swift in 1716, in the garden of the deanery, by the Bishop of Clogher. Yet in her will, drawn up as late as December, 1727, she describes herself as Esther Johnson, spinster. Now that we have entered upon the history of Swift's loves, let us dispatch the subject in a few words.

Varina, a predecessor of Stella's, was the title by which Swift designated Miss Jane Waryng, who first declined his proposals, and then herself made overtures which were received in a style which at once closed all negotiations between the parties. Vanessa was the poetical name of Miss Esther Vanhomrigh, who about 1712, being between eighteen and twenty, fell desperately in love with Swift, then not much less than forty-five. How both the ladies, Stella and Vanessa, followed Swift to Ireland, how both suffered from the pangs of jealousy and the crooked dealing of the unworthy lover, and how fatal was the fruit of that knowledge so anxiously desired by the unhappy Vanessa,—all these and other details have been graphically sketched by Sir Walter Scott in his Life of Swift. We give a brief quotation:

"Miss Vanhomrigh . . . determined on bringing to a crisis those expectations of a union with the object of her affections, to the hope of which she had clung amid every vicissitude of his conduct towards her. The most probable ban was his undefined connection with Mrs. Johnson, which, as it must have been perfectly known to her, had, doubtless, long excited her secret jealousy. . . . At length, however, Vanessa's impatience prevailed, and she ventured on the decisive step of writing to Mrs. Johnson herself, requesting to know the nature of that connection. Stella, in reply, informed her of her marriage with the Dean; and, full of the highest resentment against Swift for having given another female such a right as Miss Vanhomrigh's inquiries implied, she sent to him her rival's letter of interrogation, and, without seeing him, or awaiting his reply, retired to the house of Mr. Ford, near Dublin. Every reader knows the consequence. Swift, in one of those paroxysms of fury to which he was liable, both from temper and disease, rode instantly to Marley Abbey. As he entered the apartment, the sternness of his countenance, which was peculiarly formed to express the fiercer passions, struck the unfortunate Vanessa with such terror that she could scarce ask whether he would sit down. He answered by flinging a letter on the table, and, instantly leaving the house, mounted his horse, and returned to Dublin. When Vanessa opened the packet, she only found her own letter to Stella. It was her death-warrant. She sunk at once under the disappointment of the delayed yet cherished hopes which had so long sickened her heart, and beneath the unrestrained wrath of him for whose sake she had indulged them. How long she survived this last interview is uncertain; but the time does not seem to have exceeded a few weeks."—Section v.

(See the poem of Cadenus and Vanessa, and the Correspondence of Swift and Vanessa, in Swift's Works.)

This occurred in 1722, when the reverend Lothario had attained the mature age of fifty-four. Vanessa, who had resided in Ireland since 1714, was about twenty-nine; Stella, who had followed Swift to Ireland about 1700, and since then had made it her home, was now about forty. We return to our chronological summary of Swift's ecclesiastical, political, and literary biography. In the next year (1699) after the death of Temple he accompanied Lord Berkeley to Ireland as chaplain, acting for a time as private secretary; in the same year he received from his lordship, in place of the deanery of Derry, which he had promised him, the rectory of Agher and the vicarages of Laracor (about twenty miles from Dublin) and Rathbeggan, in the diocese of Meath; to which was added in 1700 the prebend of Dunlavin: in 1701 he published his first political tract, A Discourse on the Contests and Dissentions between the Nobles and Commons at Athens and Rome, Lon., 4to, (and this raised him to a prominent place among the leaders of the Whigs;) in 1704 appeared the Tale of a Tub, (see SWIFT, THOMAS,) together with The Battle of the Books, (see BENTLEY, RICHARD, D.D., p. 170, supra;) in 1705 he made an unsuccessful application for the remission of the First-Fruits for Ireland; in 1708 he published The Sentiments of a Church of England Man, an attack upon astrology, (represented by Partridge, the Almanac-maker,) under the name of Isaac

Bickerstaff an Argument against Abolishing Christianity, and A Letter on [in defence of] the Sacramental Test; in 1709, A Project for the Advancement of Religion, ("the only work to which he ever put his name,") a Vindication of Bickerstaff, and an explanation of an Ancient Prophecy; in 1710 he again visited England, to obtain a remission of the First-Fruits and Twentieth Parts; determined to join the Tories, and was introduced to Harley and St. John; in a short time gained the remission which he had solicited for the Irish clergy; conducted The Examiner (a weekly periodical, started by St. John, Prior, and others, in support of the new ministry) from November 10, 1710, (No. 14,) to June 14, 1711, (No. 45;) formed the Tory Society of Brothers, of which he was the most active member; published, November 27, 1711, The Conduct of the Allies, (in defence of a peace with France,) of which more than 11,000 copies were sold in two months; in 1712 issued his Proposal for Correcting, Improving, and Ascertaining the English Tongue, (a treatise of little philological value,) and his Reflections on the Barrier Treaty; February 23, 1713, was made Dean of St. Patrick's, after vain efforts for an episcopal superintendence over the colonial clergy in America, (some years previous,) and the bishopric of Hereford; in May, 1714, made his last unsuccessful effort to reconcile Lords Oxford and Bolingbroke and thus secure the stability of the Tory Government, (see his letter to Edward, Earl of Oxford, June 14, 1737;) in 1714 published The Public Spirit of the Whigs, (an answer to Sir Richard Steele's Crisis,) and Free Thoughts on the Present State of Public Affairs, and received the Queen's order (rendered worthless by her Majesty's death) for £1000; returned to his deanery in 1714, and did not again visit England until 1726; in 1720 published a Proposal for the Universal Use of Irish Manufacturers, (for which the printer was prosecuted,) and in 1724 increased the popularity elicited by this tract by his famous M. B. Drapier Letters, a series of vigorous and successful protests against William Wood's patent to coin for circulation in Ireland farthings and half-pence to the amount of £108,000, (£300 was unsuccessfully offered by Lord Carteret and the Privy Council for the discovery of the author of the Fourth Letter;) in 1726 he visited England, in the same year published his Travels of Gulliver, and in March, 1727, again (for the last time) visited England, and, in conjunction with Pope, sent to the press three volumes ("the last volume" is dated 1728, but his preface bears date May 27, 1727) of their Miscellanies, (see, also, their Miscellanies, ed. 1736, 6 vols. 12mo, and POPE, ALEXANDER, supra;) in 1728–9 spent about a year with Sir Arthur Acheson, at Gosford, his seat in the North of Ireland, and about this time published a number of tracts, and wrote some light pieces of poetry, (Hamilton's Bawn, &c.;) in 1735 composed, against the members of the Irish House of Commons who opposed the right of pasturage, or agistment tithe, his bitter satire of The Legion Club; in 1736 opposed by pen and tongue the primate Boulter's scheme for regulating the exchange with Ireland by diminishing the value of the gold coin in order to increase the quantity of silver; in 1738 permitted his Polite Conversation, a work of earlier years, to be sent to the press; in 1740 he evinced symptoms of that mental derangement which he had so long feared,—to escape which he had, for some time past, daily prayed for sudden death. "I hope I shall never see you again" was his wonted valedictory to his social evening circles. Here is a melancholy epistle to his first-cousin and faithful friend and neighbour, Mrs. Whiteway:

"I have been very miserable all night, and to-day extremely deaf and full of pain. I am so stupid and confounded that I cannot express the mortification I am under both in body and mind. All I can say is, that I am not in torture; but I daily and hourly expect it. Pray let me know how your health is, and your family. I hardly understand one word I write. I am sure my days will be very few; few and miserable they must be.

"I am, for those few days,

"Yours entirely,

"J. SWIFT.

"If I do not blunder, it is Saturday, July 26th, 1740."

"In the beginning of 1741," writes his friend, Dr. Patrick Delany, (p. 491, supra,) "his understanding was so much impaired and his passions so greatly increased, that he was utterly incapable of conversation. Strangers were not permitted to approach him, and his friends found it necessary to have guardians appointed of his person and estate. Early in the year 1742 his reason was wholly subverted, and his rage became absolute madness. The last person he knew was Mrs. Whiteway; and the sight of her, when he knew her no longer, threw him into fits of rage so violent and dreadful that she was forced to leave him. . . . In October, 1742, after this frenzy had continued several months, his left eye swelled to the size of an egg; . . . during one week it was with difficulty that five persons kept him by mere force from tearing out his eyes."

He had a short return of reason, succeeded by total insensibility. We resume Delany's narration:

"After the Dean had continued silent a whole year in this helpless state of idiocy, his housekeeper went into his room on the 30th of November, [1743,] in the morning, telling him that it was his birthday, and that bonfires and illuminations were preparing to celebrate it as usual: to this he immediately replied, 'It is all folly: they had better let it alone.'"

He sometimes celebrated his birthday himself after a very different fashion:

"I hope things will be better on Thursday, [his birthday,] else I shall be full of the spleen, because it is a day you seem to regard, although I detest it, and I read the third chapter of Job that morning."—Swift to Mrs. Whiteway, Nov. 27, 1738.

We return to the closing scene:

"In the course of about three years," says Scott, "he is only known to have spoken once or twice. At length, when this awful moral lesson had subsisted from 1743 until the 19th of October, 1745, it pleased God to release the subject of these Memoirs from this calamitous situation. He died upon that day, without a single pang; so gently, indeed, that his attendants were scarce aware of the moment of his dissolution.

"It was then that the gratitude of the Irish showed itself in the full glow of national enthusiasm. The interval was forgotten during which their great patriot had been dead to the world, and he was wept and mourned as if he had been called away in the full career of his public services. Young and old of all ranks surrounded the house, to pay the last tribute of sorrow and of affection. Locks of his hair were so eagerly sought after that Mr. Sheridan happily applies to the enthusiasm of the citizens of Dublin the lines of Shakespeare:

> "'Yea, beg a hair of him in memory,
> And dying mention it within their wills,
> Bequeathing it as a rich legacy
> Unto their issue.'"
> Scott's Life of Swift.

In concluding this sad story, it may be thought proper for us to join with those who, pointing the finger of admonition at the cage of the wretched maniac, exclaim, "Behold an awful monument of the retributive justice of Almighty God!" But we have no heart for such censorship: we have not so "learned Christ." Remembering that those "whose blood Pilate mingled with their sacrifices," and that the eighteen upon whom the tower of Siloam fell, were not proved by their greater calamities to be greater sinners than "all men that dwelt in Jerusalem," we presume not to "deal God's judgments round the world on all we deem his foes;" and we hesitate to pronounce nonconformity with ourselves enmity against God.

We concur with those biographers of Swift who condemn many points of his character; but we are by no means sure that either of these, if placed in like circumstances and likewise constituted, would have behaved any better.

His treatment of the three women whose names will be forever associated with his own has been greatly, perhaps justly, censured; but can nothing be said, and honestly said, in his defence?

Varina:—he certainly discouraged her late repentance; but is every postponed suitor obliged to kindle into fresh raptures whensoever it pleases the lady to change her mind?

Stella:—he was unwilling to live in matrimonial relations with her. May not the "fearful looking for" of madness which terrified his later years have long before held him in bondage, and thus constituted that a virtue which has been adjudged a crime? What meant Swift when, then apparently in the prime of his powers, he remarked of Lord Allen, "I know that he is a madman; and, if that were all, no man living could commiserate his condition more than myself"? More than twenty years before his death, he exclaimed prophetically to Dr. Young, "I shall be like that tree: I shall die at the top."

What was the mystery referred to in the following sad chapter of a bridegroom's history?

"Immediately subsequent to the ceremony [the private marriage of Swift and Stella] Swift's state of mind appears to have been dreadful. Delany, (as I have learned from a friend of his relict,) being pressed to give his opinion on this strange union, said that, about the time it took place, he observed Swift to be extremely gloomy and agitated; so much so that he went to Archbishop King to mention his apprehensions. On entering the library, Swift rushed out with a countenance of distraction, and passed him without speaking. He found the archbishop in tears, and upon asking the reason he said, 'You have just met the most unhappy man on earth; but on the subject of his wretchedness you must never ask a question.' Swift secluded himself from society for some days. When he reappeared, his intercourse with Stella and Mrs. Dingley [the lady with whom Stella resided] was resumed, with the same guarded and cautious attention to prevent the slightest suspicion of a more intimate union with the former; as if such intimacy had not now been legal and virtuous. Stella, therefore, continued the beloved and intimate friend of Swift, the regulator of his household on public days, although she only appeared there as an ordinary guest; the companion of his social hours, and his comforter in sickness; but his wife only in name, and even that nominal union a secret from the world."—Sir Walter Scott: Life of Swift, sect. v.

We do not dwell upon Delany's supposition that Swift's unhappiness arose from his knowledge that Stella and himself were, by different mothers, the children of Sir William Temple, because we concur with Scott in deeming this hypothesis untenable.

Vanessa:—it was undoubtedly very wrong for Swift to frequent her society after a declaration of love which he could not honestly encourage; but the temptation was great. Swift was but a man,—a courted, petted, spoiled man,—delighted by and delighting in the exercise of social fascinations of no common order; and it is surely something in his favour that (rather late in the day, perhaps) he so strenuously and sincerely strove to discourage that "inexpressible passion for him which Vanessa declared it was not in the power of time or accident to lessen:" "though," complains she, "you endeavour by severities to force me from you." How many of Swift's censors would have visited the fair Vanessa with the "severities" which they lavish on the Dean? Let us temper judgment with mercy; and we think that "the quality of" our "mercy is not strained." Committing these suggestions—for they are not offered as vindications—to the consideration of the candid reader, we proceed to adduce the opinions of a number of eminent authorities on Swift's Character as a Man.

Let us first cite the testimony of his friend of many years, (surely our intimates know us, if any do,) Dr. Delany, Prebendary of St. Patrick's, (p. 491, supra.)

"My lord," he writes to Lord Orrery, "when you consider Swift's singular, peculiar, and most variegated vein of wit, always rightly intended, (although not always so rightly directed,) delightful in many instances, and salutary even where it is most offensive; when you consider his strict truth; his fortitude in resisting oppression and arbitrary power; his fidelity in friendship; his sincere love and zeal for religion; his uprightness in making right resolutions, and his steadiness in adhering to them; . . . his invincible patriotism, even to a country which he did not love; his very various, well-devised, well-judged, and extensive charities throughout his life, and his whole fortune (to say nothing of his wife's) conveyed to the same Christian purposes [a hospital in Dublin for lunatics and idiots: endowment £10,000] at his death; charities from which he could enjoy no honour, advantage, or satisfaction of any kind in this world; when you consider his ironical and humorous, as well as his serious, schemes for the promotion of true religion and virtue; his success in soliciting for the First-Fruits and Twentieths, to the unspeakable benefit of the Established Church of Ireland; and his felicity (to rate it no higher) in giving occasion to the building of fifty new churches in London: all this considered, the character of his life will appear like that of his writings; they will both bear to be reconsidered and re-examined with the utmost attention, and always discover new beauties and excellences upon every examination.

"They will bear to be considered as the sun, in which the brightness will hide the blemishes; and whenever petulant ignorance, pride, malignity, or envy interposes to cloud or sully his fame, I will take upon me to pronounce that the eclipse will not last long.

"To conclude. No man ever deserved better of his country than Swift did of his. A steady, persevering, inflexible friend; a wise, a watchful, and a faithful counsellor, under many severe trials and bitter persecutions, to the manifest hazard both of his liberty and fortune.

"He lived a blessing, he died a benefactor, and his name will ever live an honour, to Ireland."—Observations on Lord Orrery's [see Boyle, John, p. 231, (supra,) new ed., 1831, 12mo] Remarks on the Life and Writings of Dr. Jonathan Swift, by P. Delany, 1764, 8vo, 291.

"He was a churchman rationally zealous; he desired the prosperity and maintained the honour of the clergy; of the dissenters he did not wish to infringe the toleration, but he opposed their encroachments. To his duty as dean he was very attentive. . . . In his church he restored the practice of weekly communion, and distributed the sacramental elements in the most solemn and devout manner with his own hand. He came to church every morning, preached commonly in his turn, and attended the evening anthem, that it might not be negligently performed. . . . The suspicions of his irreligion proceeded in a great measure from his dread of hypocrisy; instead of wishing to seem better, he delighted in seeming worse, than he was. He went in London to early prayers, lest he should be seen at church; he read prayers to his servants every morning with such dexterous secrecy, that Dr. Delany was six months in his house before he knew it. He was not only careful to hide the good which he did, but willingly incurred the suspicion of evil which he did not. He forgot what himself had formerly asserted, that hypocrisy is less mischievous than open impiety. Dr. Delany, with all his zeal for his honour, has justly condemned this part of his character."—Dr. Johnson: Life of Swift, in his Lives of the English Poets.

"Swift was in person tall, strong, and well made, of a dark complexion, but with blue eyes, ["they are quite azure as the heavens, and there's a very uncommon archness in them."—Pope, in Spence, 158;] black and bushy eyebrows, nose somewhat aquiline, and features which well expressed the stern, haughty, and dauntless turn of his mind. He was never known to laugh, and his smiles are happily characterized by the well-known lines of Shakespeare. Indeed, the whole description of Cassius might be applied to Swift. . . . His manners were, in his better days, free, lively, and engaging, not devoid of peculiarities, but blending them so well to circumstances that his company was universally courted. . . . He often exhibited in his first address a sternness and bluntness of demeanour which, detached from the mode in which he well knew how to repair the pain he had given, was harsh to his inferiors and uncivil to those of higher rank. An anecdote which, though told by Mrs. Pilkington, is well attested, bears, that the last time he was in London he went to dine with the Earl of Burlington, who was then but newly married. The earl, being willing, it is supposed, to have some diversion, did not introduce him to his lady, nor mention his name. After dinner, said the Dean, 'Lady Burlington, I hear you can sing; sing me a song.' The lady looked on this unceremonious manner of asking a favour with distaste, and positively refused. He said 'She should sing, or he would make her. Why, madam, I suppose you take me for one of your poor English hedge-parsons. Sing when I bid you.' As the earl did nothing but laugh at this freedom, the lady was so vexed that she burst into tears, and retired. His first compliment to her, when he saw her again, was, 'Pray, madam, are you as proud and as ill natured now as when I saw you last?' To which she answered, with great humour, 'No, Mr. Dean; I'll sing for you, if you please.' From which time he conceived great esteem for her."—Scott's Life of Swift, Conclusion.

Another anecdote illustrative of the Dean's peculiarities, told by no less a man than his friend Pope, is too good to be omitted:

"Dr. Swift has an odd blunt way that is mistaken by strangers for ill nature. 'Tis so bad that there's no describing it but by facts. I'll tell you one that just comes into my head. One evening Gay and I went to see him: you know how intimately we were all acquainted. On our coming in, 'Hey-day, gentlemen,' says the Doctor, 'what's the meaning of this visit? How came you to leave all the great lords that you are so fond of, to come hither to see a poor Dean?' 'Because we would rather see you than any of them.' 'Ay, any one that did not know you as well as I do, might believe you. But, since you are come, I must get some supper for you, I suppose?' 'No, Doctor, we have supped already.' 'Supped already! that's impossible: why, 'tis not eight o'clock yet.' 'Indeed we have.' 'That's very strange: but if you had not supped, I must have got something for you. Let me see: what should I have had? a couple of lobsters? ay, that would have done very well; two shillings: tarts; a shilling. But you will drink a glass of wine with me, though you supped so much before your usual time, only to spare my pocket?' 'No, we had rather talk with you than drink with you.' 'But if you had supped with me, as in all reason you ought to have done, you must have drank with me. A bottle of wine, two shillings. Two and two is four; and one is five: just two and sixpence apiece. There, Pope, there's half a crown for you; and there's another for you, sir; for I won't save any thing by you, I am determined.' This was all said and done with his usual seriousness on such occasions; and, in spite of every thing we could say to the contrary, he actually obliged us to take the money."—Spence's Anecdotes, ed. 1820, 19.

"Swift, whose muse seems to have been mere misanthropy: he was a cynick rather than a poet; and his natural dryness and sarcastick severity would have been unpleasing had he not qualified them by adopting the extravagant humour of Lucian and Rabelais."—Smollett: Hist. of Eng.: George I., Notes.

"Swift was a wild beast, who worried and baited all mankind almost, because his intolerable arrogance, vanity, pride, and ambition were disappointed."—Horace Walpole to Sir Horace Mann, Jan. 13, 1780: Letters, ed. 1861, ii. 311.

"The apostate politician, the ribald priest, the perjured lover, —a heart burning with hatred against the whole human race,— a mind richly stored with images from the dung-hill and the lazar-house."—Lord Macaulay: Edin. Rev., lvi. 538.

"His first connections were with the Whigs, who seem to have treated him with a slight, which, with a consciousness of his extraordinary powers, he very justly resented. He unfortunately suffered himself to be betrayed by his just resentment into a coalition with their opponents, without sufficiently considering that to retain right principles in mere abstraction was no atonement for co-operation with their enemies. But it must not be forgotten that in this unhappy change he broke no confidence; that he long resisted the tendency of political separation to dissolve friendship; and that when he at last yielded, instead of persecuting old friends, as so often happens, he used all his influence to serve them."—Sir James Mackintosh: Life, ii. ch. iii.

"It is of itself a tolerably decisive fact, that this change took place just when the Whig ministry went out of power and their adversaries came into full possession of all the patronage and interest of the government. The whole matter, however, is fairly spoken out in various parts of his own writings; and we do not believe there is anywhere on record a more barefaced avowal of political apostasy, undisguised and unpalliated by the slightest colour or pretence of public or conscientious motives."—Lord Jeffrey: Scott's Edition of Swift: Edin. Rev., Sept. 1816; repub. in Jeffrey's Essays, and in Longman's Trav. Lib., (Swift and Richardson, by Lord Jeffrey,) Dec. 1852, cr. 8vo.

His lordship's estimate of Swift's public and private character is most unfavourable: it must be carefully perused after a dispassionate examination of the very different judgments of Scott and Mackintosh.

This notice of Scott's edition of Swift naturally introduces a list of EDITIONS OF SWIFT'S WORKS.

Faulkner's edition of Swift's Works, Dublin, 20 vols. 8vo, (5 copies on thick paper, l. p., r. 8vo,) and the edition by Hawkesworth, &c., London, 1755–68, though both valuable as curiosities, are not to be purchased as Complete Editions of Swift. The only ones which can (and not all these, strictly speaking, can) claim this title are the following:

I. London, 25 vols. 8vo, (same in 27 vols. cr. 8vo, also called 12mo, and in 27 vols. 18mo:) i.–xii., by Dr. Hawkesworth, 1755; xiii., xiv., by William Bowyer, assisted by John Nichols, 1762; xv., xvi., by Deane Swift, 1765; xvii., by John Nichols, with General Index to vols. i.–xvii. and xviii.–xxiii., 1775; xviii., xix., xx., Epistolary Correspondence, by Dr. Hawkesworth, 1766; xxi., xxii., xxiii., Epistolary Correspondence, by Dean Swift, 1767; xxiv., called Supplement, by John Nichols, 1776; xxv., called Supplement, by John Nichols, 1779. See Nichols's Illust. of Lit., v. 391, 8vo, ix.; Lon. Month. Rev., 1776, ii. 162–3; 1779, ii. 356. We have given the dates of the first editions of the volumes; there were new impressions from time to time in London, Dublin, and Edinburgh.

II. London, Arranged, Revised, and Corrected by Thomas Sheridan, A.M., 17 vols. 8vo; l. p., r. 8vo. See Nichols's Illust. of Lit., v. 394, viii. 12, 42.

III. London, Corrected and Revised by John Nichols, 1801, 19 vols. 8vo; l. p., r. 8vo; again, 1803, (some 1804,) 24 vols. 18mo; again, 1808, 19 vols. 8vo; N. York, 1812–13, 24 vols. 12mo. See Nichols's Illust. of Lit., v. 396; NICHOLS, JOHN, No. 12.

IV. Edinburgh, Containing additional Letters, Tracts, and Poems, not hitherto published, with Notes, and a Life of the Author, by Sir Walter Scott, 1814, (some 1815,) 1250 copies, 19 vols. 8vo; l. p., r. 8vo; 2d ed., 1824, 1250 copies, 19 vols. 8vo. Contents: Vol. i., Memoirs, by Scott, (repub. Paris, 1826, 2 vols. 12mo, and in Scott's Prose Works.) Vol. ii., Journal to Stella, Letters 1 to 42. Vol. iii., Journal to Stella, Letters 43 to 65; Memoirs relating to the Change in the Ministry in 1710; Contests and Dissentions in Athens and Rome; The Examiner, Nos. 13 to 45. Vol. iv., Character of the Earl of Wharton; Remarks on a Letter to the Seven Lords appointed to examine Greig; New Journey to Paris; Advice to the October Club; Reasons to prove that no one is obliged, as a Whig, to oppose the Queen; Pretended Letter of Thanks from Lord Wharton to the Bishop of St. Asaph, in the name of the Kitcat Club; Refutation of the Falsehoods alleged against Erasmus Lewis; Preface to the Bishop of Sarum's Introduction to the Third Volume of the History of the Reformation of the Church of England; Importance of the Guardian; The Public Spirit of the Whigs; Letter from Dr. Tripe to Nestor Ironside; The Conduct of the Allies; Remarks on the Barrier Treaty between Queen Anne and the States-General; Appendix to The Conduct of the Allies. Vol. v., History of the Four Last Years of the Queen, (originally entitled The History of the Peace of Utrecht, written in 1714, intended by Swift to have appeared in 1737, but first pub. 1757,—some 1758,—8vo;) Present State of Affairs, 1714; Considerations upon the Death of the Queen; Inquiry into the Behaviour of the Queen's Last Ministry; Narrative of Guiscard's Examination, March, 1711; Specker's Speech, April, 1711; Reasons for creating Robert Harley a Peer; Comment on Dr. Hare's Sermon; New Vindication of the Duke of Marlborough; True Relation of the Intended Riot on Queen Elizabeth's Birth-Day; New Way of Selling Places at Court; Story of the St. Alban's Ghost; Character of Richard Steele. V. London, Containing interesting and valuable papers not hitherto published, with a Memoir of the Author, by Thomas Roscoe, 1841, 2 vols. demy 8vo; also 1848, 1851, 1853, 1856, 1868, each in 2 vols. demy 8vo; N. York, ("first complete American edition,") 1859, 6 vols. 12mo; again, Dec. 1862, 6 vols. 12mo. A new edition of Swift's Works, prefaced by a Life, Journals, and Letters, has been for some time promised by Mr. John Murray, of London.

We also notice his Select Works, illustrated by Stothard, Lon., 1825, 5 vols. sm. 12mo; his Choice Works, with Life by Rev. John Mitford, and Notes by W. Cooke Taylor, LL.D., N. York, 1857, 2 vols. 12mo; his Works, Carefully Selected, with Life of the Author, and Original and Authentic Notes, by D. Laing Purves, Edin., 1868, r. demy 8vo, (Nimmo's Stand. Lib.;) his Poems, with Life by Rev. John Mitford, Lon., 1833, 3 vols. 12mo, (Ald. Poets, xxvii., xxviii., xxix.,) and same, Bost., 1854, also 1859, 3 vols. 16mo, (L., B. & Co's. Brit. Poets;) N. York, 12mo; Swift and Prior's Poems, Oxf., 1853, 12mo.

Of Gulliver's Travels (of which the first edition, 1726, 4 Parts, in 2 vols. 8vo, contains some anecdotes omitted in later editions) a modern French version, with over 400 wood-cuts, after designs by Grandville, Paris, 1838, 2 vols. 8vo, is highly esteemed by collectors. In English, with Life of Swift, Notes, and Essay on Satirical Fiction, by W. Cooke Taylor, LL.D., and designs after Grandville, Lon., 1841, r. 8vo, (H. G. Bohn;) another illustrated ed., 1840, r. 8vo, (Hayward;) "for the first time presented in an entirely unexceptionable form," with plates by Browne, new ed., Dec. 1847, 18mo, (Burn's Cab. Series.) There is also an impression with a Sketch of the Life of Swift, Edin., 1858, 12mo; and another ed., with "a faithful French translation, for the use of beginners in French," by Dr. Pirscher, Lon., 1859, 12mo. Gulliver's Travels: Edin., 1824, 8vo; N. York, 8vo; Lon., 24mo, and 1864, 8vo, (Illustrations to, by J. G. Thomson, 1864, 8vo;) 1867, 18mo; 1868, p. 8vo; with Explan. Notes and a Life of the Author, by J. F. Waller, LL.D., and Illustrations by T. Morten, 1865, cr. 4to: reissue, 1870. Hints to Servants: a Poetical and Modernized Version of Dean Swift's Celebrated Directions, &c., by an Upper Servant, with 12 Original Designs by Kenny Meadows, 1843, fp. 8vo. Tale of a Tub, new ed., 1867, 18mo.

SWIFT'S CHARACTER AS AN AUTHOR.

"In his works he has given very different specimens both of sentiments and expressions. His 'Tale of a Tub' has little resemblance to his other pieces. It exhibits a vehemence and rapidity of mind, a copiousness of images, and vivacity of diction, such as he afterwards never possessed or never exerted. It is of a mode so distinct and peculiar that it must be considered by itself; what is true of that, is not true of any thing else which he has written. . . . ["What a genius I had when I wrote that book!"—Swift, in old age.] In his other works is found an equable tenor of easy language, which rather trickles than flows. His delight was in simplicity. That he has in his works no metaphor, as has been said, is not true; but his few metaphors seem to be received rather by necessity than choice. . . . His style was well suited to his thoughts, which are never subtilized by nice disquisitions, decorated by sparkling conceits, elevated by ambitious sentences, or variegated by far-sought learning. . . . In the poetical works of Dr. Swift there is not much upon which the critic can exercise his powers. They are often humorous, almost always light, and have the qualities which recommend such compositions,—easiness and gayety. They are, for the most part, what their author intended. The diction is correct, the numbers are smooth, and the rhymes exact. There seldom occurs a hard-laboured expression, or a redundant epithet; all his verses exemplify his own definition of a good style —they consist of 'proper words in proper places.'"—DR. JOHNSON: Life of Swift, in Cunningham's ed. of Johnson's Lives of the English Poets, 1854, iii. 190, 191, 199: q. v. (Index) for the editor's illustrative Notes. See, also, Croker's Boswell's Johnson, Index.

"As an AUTHOR there are three peculiarities remarkable in the character of Swift. The first of these has been rarely conceded to an author, at least by his contemporaries. It is the distinguished attribute of ORIGINALITY; and it cannot be refused to Swift by the most severe critic. Even Johnson has allowed that perhaps no author can be found who has borrowed so little, or has so well maintained his claim to be considered as original. There was indeed nothing written before his time which could serve for his model, and the few hints which he has adopted from other authors bear no more resemblance to his compositions than the green flax to the cable which is formed from it. . . . The second peculiarity, which has indeed been already noticed, is his total indifference to literary fame. Swift executed his various and numerous works as a carpenter forms wedges, mallets, or other implements of his art; not with the purpose of distinguishing himself by the workmanship bestowed on the tools themselves, but solely in order to render them fit for accomplishing a certain purpose, beyond which they were of no value in his eyes. . . . The careless mode in which Swift suffered his works to get to the public, his refusing them the credit of his name, and his renouncing all connection with the profits of literature, indicate his disdain of the character of a professional author.

"The third distinguishing mark of Swift's literary character is, that, with the exception of history, (for his fugitive attempts in Pindaric and Latin verse are too unimportant to be noticed,) he has never attempted any style of composition in which he has not obtained a distinguished pitch of excellence. . . . We have endeavoured elsewhere [vol. xi. of his ed. of Swift's Works] to make some remarks on those celebrated Travels, [of Gulliver.] Perhaps no work ever exhibited such general attractions to all classes. It offered personal and political satire to the readers in high life, low and coarse incident to the vulgar, marvels to the romantic, wit to the young and lively, lessons of morality and policy to the grave, and maxims of deep and bitter misanthropy to neglected age and disappointed ambition. The plan of the satire varies in the different parts."—SIR WALTER SCOTT: Life of Swift, sect. vi., and Conclusion.

"That part of Dean Swift's satire [Gulliver's Travels] which relates to the Struldbrugs may possibly occur to some readers as bearing upon this topic. That the staunch admirers of that singularly-gifted person should have been flung into extasies on the perusal of this extraordinary part of his writings, need not surprise us. Their raptures were full easily excited; but I am quite clear they have given a wrong gloss to it, and heaped upon its merits a very undeserved praise. They think that the picture of the Struldbrugs was intended to wean us from a love of life, and that it has well accomplished its purpose. I am very certain that the dean never had any such thing in view, because his sagacity was far too great not to perceive that he only could make out this position by a most undisguised begging of the question. How could any man of the most ordinary reflection expect to wean his fellow-creatures from love of life by describing a sort of persons who at a given age lost their faculties and became doting, drivelling idiots? Did any man breathing ever pretend that he wished to live, not only for centuries, but even for threescore years and ten, bereaved of his understanding, and treated by the law and by his fellow-men as in hopeless incurable dotage? The passage in question is much more likely to have proceeded from Swift's exaggerated misanthropy, and to have been designed as an antidote to human pride, by showing that our duration is necessarily limited,—if, indeed, it is not rather to be regarded as the work of mere whim and caprice."—LORD BROUGHAM: A Discourse of Natural Theology, sect. v., last note.

"Now it came to pass that, about this time, the renowned Wouter Van Twiller, full of years and honours and councildinners, had reached that period of life and faculty which, according to the great Gulliver, entitles a man to admission into the ancient order of Struldbrugs."—WASHINGTON IRVING: Knickerbocker.

"Perhaps the most melancholy satire in the whole of that dreadful book is the description of the very old people in the voyage to Laputa. At Lugnag Gulliver hears of some persons who never die, called the Struldbrugs, and, expressing a wish to become acquainted with men who have so much learning and experience, his colloquist describes the Struldbrugs to him."—THACKERAY: English Humourists: Swift.

"The Voyages of Captain Lemuel Gulliver is indisputably his greatest work. The idea of making fictitious travel the vehicle of satire as well as of amusement, is at least as old as Lucian, but has never been carried into execution with such success, spirit, and originality as in this celebrated performance. . . . Of his poetry we do not think there is much to be said; for we cannot persuade ourselves that Swift was in any respect a poet. . . . Of his style it has been usual to speak with great and, we think, exaggerated praise. It is less mellow than Dryden's—less elegant than Pope's or Addison's—less free and noble than Lord Bolingbroke's—and utterly without the glow and loftiness which belonged to our earlier masters. It is radically a low and homely style—without grace and without affectation; and chiefly remarkable for a great choice and profusion of common words and expressions. . . . In humour and in irony, and in the talent of debasing and defiling what he hated, we join with the world in thinking the Dean of St. Patrick's without a rival."—LORD JEFFREY: Edin. Rev., Sept. 1816, 46, 49, 56, 57, et ubi supra.

"By the judicious advice of Mr. Mallet, I was directed to the writings of Swift and Addison: wit and simplicity are their common attributes; but the style of Swift is supported by manly vigour; that of Addison is adorned by the female graces of elegance and mildness."—GIBBON: Memoirs of my Life and Writings, ed. 1837, 56.

"But I know your affection for wherewith proceeds from your partiality to Dean Swift, whom I can often laugh with, whose style I can even approve, but surely can never admire. It has no harmony, no eloquence, no ornament, and not much correctness, whatever the English may imagine. Were not their literature still in a somewhat barbarous state, that author's place would not be so high among their classics."—Hume to Robertson: Dugald Stewart's Account, &c. of Dr. W. Robertson, sect. ii.

"The Tale of a Tub is, in my apprehension, the master-piece of Swift; certainly Rabelais has nothing superior, even in invention, nor any thing so condensed, so pointed, so full of real meaning, of biting satire, of felicitous analogy. The Battle of the Books is such an improvement of the similar combat in the Lutrin, that we can hardly own it as an imitation."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 573.

"M. Swift est Rabelais dans son bon sens et vivant en bonne compagnie. Il n'a pas, à la vérité, la gaité du premier, mais il a toute la finesse, la raison, le choix, le bon goût qui manquent à notre curé de Meudon. Ses vers sont d'un goût singulier, et presque inimitable; la bonne plaisanterie est son partage en vers et en prose; mais pour le bien entendre, il faut faire un petit voyage dans son pays."—VOLTAIRE: Lettres sur les Anglais, Lett. 22.

"Jonathan Swift has been most inappropriately called by Voltaire the English Rabelais. Voltaire relished only the impieties of Rabelais, and his humour, when it is good; but the deep satire on society and man, the lofty philosophy, the grand style, of the curé of Meudon, escaped his notice, as he saw only the weak side of Christianity, and had no idea of the intellectual and moral revolution effected in mankind by the gospel. . . . The ages in which the two writers lived produce, moreover, a wide difference between them: Rabelais began his language; Swift finished his."—CHATEAUBRIAND: Sketch of Eng. Lit., 1837, ii. 245, 246.

Coleridge says it was "the soul of Rabelais dwelling in a dry place."

"Perhaps the best way of describing Addison's peculiar pleasantry is to compare it with the pleasantry of some other great satirists. The three most eminent masters of the art of ridicule during the eighteenth century were, we conceive, Addison, Swift, and Voltaire. Which of the three had the greatest power of moving laughter may be questioned. But each of them, within his own domain, was supreme. Voltaire is the prince of buffoons. His merriment is without disguise or restraint. He gambols; he grins; he shakes his sides; he points the finger; he turns up the nose; he shoots out the tongue. The manner of Swift is the very opposite to this. He moves laughter, but never joins in it. He appears in his works such as he appeared in society. All the company are convulsed with merriment, while the Dean, the author of all the mirth, preserves an invincible gravity, and even sourness, of aspect, and gives utterance to the most eccentric and ludicrous fancies with the air of a man reading the commination service.

"The manner of Addison is as remote from that of Swift as from that of Voltaire. He neither laughs out, like the French wit, nor, like the Irish wit, throws a double portion of severity into his countenance while laughing inwardly, but preserves a look peculiarly his own, a look of demure serenity, disturbed only by an arch sparkle of the eye, an almost imperceptible elevation of the brow, an almost imperceptible curl of the lip. His tone is never either that of a Jack-Pudding or of a Cynic. It is that of a gentleman, in whom the quickest sense of the ridiculous is constantly tempered by good nature and good breeding.

"We own that the humour of Addison is, in our opinion, of a more delicious flavour than the humour of either Swift or Voltaire. Thus much, at least, is certain, that both Swift and Voltaire have been successfully mimicked, and that no man has yet been able to mimic Addison. The letter of the Abbé Coyer to Pansophe is Voltaire all over, and imposed, during a long time, on the Academicians of Paris. There are passages in Arbuthnot's satirical works which we, at least, cannot distinguish from Swift's best writing. But of the many eminent men who have made Addison their model, though several have copied his mere diction with happy effect, none has been able to catch the tone of his pleasantry.

"In the World, in the Connoisseur, in the Mirror, in the Lounger, there are numerous papers written in obvious imitation of his Tatlers and Spectators. Most of these papers have some merit; many are very lively and amusing; but there is not a single one which could be passed off as Addison's on a critic of the smallest perspicacity.

"But that which chiefly distinguishes Addison from Swift, from Voltaire, from almost all the other great masters of ridicule, is the grace, the nobleness, the moral purity, which we find even in his merriment. Severity, gradually hardening and darkening into misanthropy, characterizes the works of Swift. The nature of Voltaire was, indeed, not inhuman; but he venerated nothing. Neither in the master-pieces of art nor in the purest examples of virtue, neither in the Great First Cause nor in the awful enigma of the grave, could he see any thing but subjects for drollery. The more solemn and august the theme, the more monkey-like was his grimacing and chattering. The mirth of Swift is the mirth of Mephistopheles; the mirth of Voltaire is the mirth of Puck. If, as Soame Jenyns oddly imagined, a portion of the happiness of seraphim and just men made perfect be derived from an exquisite perception of the ludicrous, their mirth must surely be no other than the mirth of Addison,—a mirth consistent with tender compassion for all that is frail and with profound reverence for all that is sublime. Nothing great, nothing amiable, no moral duty, no doctrine of natural or revealed religion, has ever been associated by Addison with any degrading idea. His humanity is without parallel in literary history. The highest proof of virtue is to possess boundless power without abusing it. No kind of power is more formidable than the power of making men ridiculous; and that power Addison possessed in boundless measure. How grossly that power was abused by Swift and by Voltaire is well known. But of Addison it may be confidently affirmed that he has blackened no man's character,—nay, that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to find, in all the volumes which he has left us, a single taunt which can be called ungenerous or unkind. Yet he had detractors whose malignity might have seemed to justify as terrible a revenge as that which men not superior to him in genius wreaked on Bettesworth and on Franc de Pompignan. He was a politician; he was the best writer of his party; he lived in times of fierce excitement, in times when persons of high character and station stooped to scurrility such as is now practised only by the basest of mankind. Yet no provocation and no example could induce him to return railing for railing."—LORD MACAULAY: Life and Writings of Addison: Edin. Rev., July, 1843; repub. in his Essays, and in his Works, Lon., 1866, vii. 90.

"His style is, in its kind, one of the models of English composition; it is proper, pure, precise, perspicuous, significant, nervous, deriving a certain dignity from a masterly contempt of puerile ornaments, in which every word seems to convey the intended meaning with the decision of the writer's character; not adapted, indeed, to express nice distinctions of thought or shades of feeling, or to convey those new and large ideas which must be illustrated by imagery, but qualified beyond any other to discuss the common business of life in such a manner as to convince and persuade the generality of men, and, where occasion allows it, meriting in its vehement plainness the praise of the most genuine eloquence. His verse is only, apparently, distinguished by the accident of measure; it has no quality of poetry, and, like his prose, is remarkable for sense and wit."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH: Life, ii. ch. iii. See, also, chaps. i., ii., and vii., and POPE, ALEXANDER, p. 1636, supra, (quotation from Sir J. Mackintosh.)

"Dean Swift may be placed at the head of those that have employed the plain style. Few writers have discovered more capacity. He treats every subject which he handles, whether serious or ludicrous, in a masterly manner. He knew, almost beyond any man, the purity, the extent, the precision, of the English language; and, therefore, to such as wish to attain a pure and correct style, he is one of the most useful models. But we must not look for much ornament and grace in his language."—DR. HUGH BLAIR: Lects. on Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres, Lect. XVIII. See, also, Lects. X., XI., XII., XIII., XVIII., XXIV., XXXIV., XXXVII.

"There is just published Swift's History, [of the Four Last Years of Queen Anne.] Pope and Lord Bolingbroke always told him it would disgrace him, and persuaded him to burn it. Disgrace him indeed it does,—being a weak libel, ill written for style, uninformed, and adopting the most errant mob stories. He makes the Duke of Marlborough a coward, Prince Eugene an assassin, my father remarkable for nothing but impudence, and would make my Lord Somers any thing but the most amiable character in the world, if unfortunately he did not praise him while he tries to abuse."—Horace Walpole to Sir Horace Mann, March 21, 1758: Letters. See, also, Feb. 10, 1758.

"Swift's reputation as a poet has been in a manner obscured by the greater splendour, by the natural force and inventive genius, of his prose writings; but, if he had never written either the Tale of a Tub or Gulliver's Travels, his name merely as a poet would have come down to us, and have gone down to posterity, with well-earned honours. His Imitations of Horace, and still more his verses on his own Death, [probably written about 1730 or 1731; published 1739, fol.,] place him in the first rank of agreeable moralists in verse. . . . Swift shone as one of the most sensible of the poets; he is also distinguished as one of the most nonsensical of them."—HAZLITT: Lects. on the English Poets, Lect. VI.

"Cousin Swift, you will never be a poet," was the great Dryden's candid verdict on returning to him his Pindaric Odes,—compositions of his earlier years. Of his sermons it has been remarked,

"One will see the original force of the Dean's genius more in these compositions, that were the legitimate sons of duty, than in other pieces, that were the natural sons of love."—EARL OF ORRERY.

His lordsh.,'s illustration is not elegant: as regards his canon, it only needs to be exactly reversed to be nearer the truth. Addison called Swift "the most agreeable companion, the truest friend, and the greatest genius of his age," (Scott's Swift, sect. ii.;) Pope ranks him as a "great master of humour," (Spence's Anecdotes, 334;) Thackeray calls him "the greatest wit of all times," (Lects. on the English Humourists, Lect. IV.;) and Lord Macaulay characterizes him as "the ablest man of the Tory party," and "the keenest of all observers of life and manners," (Hist. of Eng., i. ch. iii.; iv. ch. xx.) See, also, Lord Macaulay's comparison between the styles of Dr. Johnson's and Swift's political tracts, in his review of the Life and Writings of Sir William Temple, in Edin. Rev., Oct. 1838: repub. in his Essays; of which see, also, Index: see, also, SMITH, SYDNEY, p. 2157, supra, (quotation from Lord Macaulay.)

"At Court the Doctor had no eyes but for the very greatest. Lord Treasurer and Sir John used to call him Jonathan; and they paid him with this cheap coin for the service they took of him. He writ their lampoons, fought their enemies, flogged and bullied in their service, and, it must be owned, with a consummate skill and fierceness. 'Tis said he hath lost his intellect now, and forgotten his wrongs and his rage against mankind. I have always thought of him and of Marlborough as the two greatest men of that age. I have read his books (who doth not know them?) here in our calm woods, and imagine a giant to myself as I think of him,—a lonely fallen Prometheus, groaning as the vulture tears him. Prometheus I saw; but, when first I ever had any words with him, the giant stepped out of a sedan-chair in the Poultry, whither he had come with a tipsy Irish servant parading before him, who announced him,—bawling out his Reverence's name whilst his master below was as yet haggling with his chairmen. I dislike this Mr. Swift. . . . If the greatest satirist the world ever hath seen had writ against Harley, and not for him, what a history had he left behind of the last years of Queen Anne's reign! But Swift, that scorned all mankind, and himself not the least of all, had this merit of a faithful partisan, that he loved those chiefs who treated him well, and stuck by Harley bravely in his fall, as he gallantly had supported him in his better fortune."—THACKERAY: Esmond, book iii. ch. v., x.

Age, xxvii. 415.)

"Dean Swift is now figuring in a fashion in which he certainly never expected to figure,—namely, as the hero of a French drama. The last novelty at the Odéon is 'Le Doyen de St. Patrick,' written by MM. L. de Wailly and L. Ulbach, the former of whom wrote, some years ago, the novel 'Stella and Vanessa.' These ladies are the heroines of the drama, in the course of which both come to an untimely end. M. Tisserand, the veteran of the Odéon, represents the Dean."—Lon. Athen., Dec. 6, 1862, 739.

Dr. Parr "ranked Sydenham first amongst the Platonic scholars." Mr. Taylor considers that early prejudices and the res angusta domi "rendered Sydenham incapable of appreciating Plato's more sublime sentiments. His translation, however, of other parts," he continues, "which are not so abstruse, is excellent. In these he not only presents his reader faithfully with the matter, but likewise with the genuine manner, of Plato." See Taylor's Miscellanies, (TAYLOR, THOMAS, "The Platonist," No. 22.)

2. Baal Durotigensis: a Dissertation on the Ancient Colossal Figure at Cerne, Dorsetshire, 1843, 8vo, pp. 65.

Sydenham, Thomas, "the most illustrious of English physicians," also styled "The English Celsus," and "The English Hippocrates," was b. at Winford Eagle, Dorsetshire, 1624; admitted as a commoner of Magdalene Hall, Oxford, 1642; took the degree of Bachelor of Physic, 1648, and about the same time became a Fellow of All Souls' College; received the degree of M.D. at Cambridge, and subsequently settled in London, where he practised with great success, (notwithstanding the hostility of the College of Physicians,) being "the chief physician from 1660 to 1670, . . . when he was laid up with the terrible disease of the gout." After suffering from this complaint and from stone in the kidneys for many years, he d. Dec. 29, 1689, and was buried in the aisle of St. James's Church, Westminster.

"It is worth while, in the case of a man who acquired such high eminence as Sydenham, to inquire what were the causes to which he owed his great celebrity. He was not a learned man, and his works, written by him originally in English, were translated into Latin, before publication, by his friends Dr. Mapletoft and Mr. Havers. He constructed no brilliant theory, and indeed was always consistent in following that which he adopted. . . . Sydenham's method of treating smallpox, though so great an improvement of the practice which then prevailed, was in opposition to the theory which he had embraced. . . . This it is which constitutes his merit, that, in an age of brilliant theories, he applied himself to questioning Nature herself; justly thinking that though 'the practice of physic may seem to flow from hypotheses, yet, if the hypotheses are solid and true, they in some measure owe their origin to practice.'"—Eng. Cyc., Biog., v., 1857, 868.

Collective editions of his Works in Latin (some styled Opera Universa, also Opera omnia Medica, and Opera Medica) were published Lon., 1685, (Processus Integri, in excellent Latin, first appeared in 1693, 12mo;) 1705, 1734, 8vo; Lips., 1695, 1711, 8vo; 1827, 12mo; Genev., 1684, 12mo; 1696, 8vo; 1716, 2 tom. 4to; 1723, 4to; 1737, 2 tom. 4to; 1757, 2 vols. 4to; Leyd., 1726, 8vo; 1741, 1754, 8vo; Venet., 1735, 1762, fol.; Lion., 1737

4to, &c. In English, by C. Pechey, Lon., 1696, 1697, 1729, 1734, 1763, 8vo; trans., with Notes, by John Swan, M.D., 1742, 2 vols. 8vo; again, improved, with Notes by George Wallis, M.D., 1788, (some 1789,) 2 vols. 8vo; same, with Notes by Benjamin Rush, M.D., Phila., 1809, 8vo.

"The edition entitled 'Opera Medica,' published at Geneva, in 2 vols. 4to, in 1716, is preferable to the English editions. The translation of his works by Dr. Swan is well executed; the best edition of it is that of Dr. Wallis, in 2 vols. 8vo, published in 1789."—Eng. Cyc., Biog., v., 1857, 868.

"Translations have been made into almost all the Modern languages. In 1695 a work was published, entitled, The Practice of Physic, by Sydenham, which is a sort of compilation from his writings, 8vo. Compendium Praxeos Medicæ Sydenhami, Lond., 1719, 18mo."—Dr. Watt: Bibl. Brit.

Mr. Churchill published in 1845, 18mo, Sydenham's Medical Notes and Observations,—a little compilation.

The Sydenham Society have published: Thomæ Sydenham, M.D., Opera Omnia, edidit G. A. Greenhill, M.D., 1846, 8vo, pp. 668; and The Works of Thomas Sydenham, M.D., translated from the Latin Edition of Dr. Greenhill, with a Life of the Author, by R. G. Latham, M.D., &c., 1848–50, 2 vols. 8vo, pp. cviii., 276, viii., 296.

"All that remains of Sydenham's writing is contained in 646 octavo pages. Of these, 232 pages consist of descriptions of the various epidemics which he had himself observed. The remainder is divided between a few monographs upon particular diseases, such as hysteria, gout, dropsy, &c., and a collection of practical memoranda or empirical formulæ, for the guidance of the practitioner of medicine. . . . The grand contribution to the development of the Art of Medicine made by the English Hippocrates was this: he proved that the true mode of cure was the direct one by specifics, and that all the indirect ones by revulsions or anodynes were precarious, mischievous, or only palliative; and thus he stands midway between Hippocrates and Hahnemann. One hand he stretches to the ancient Greek, and the other he holds out to the modern German, and so he is a link in the apostolical succession of the living Church of Medicine."—J. Rutherford Russell, M.D.: History and Heroes of the Art of Medicine, (Lon., 1861, 8vo:) Sydenham, 259, 276.

"The incomparable Treatises are drawn (as it were by another Hippocrates) from his most exact and nice observation of Diseases and their symptoms; to which are added most judicious natural Hypotheses, and curative Indications deduced from them. He hath given such an exact history of all acute diseases, from the beginning of 1661 to 1680, that there is scarcely a sentence to be found therein, which is not of moment."—Dr. Charles Goodall, (p. 698, supra:) Hist. Acct. of the Coll. Proceed. against Empyrics, 1684, 4to, Epist. Ded.

"Though full of hypothetical reasoning, it had not the usual effect of making him less attentive to observation: his hypotheses seem to have sat so loosely about him, that either they did not influence his practice at all, or he could easily abandon them whenever they would not bend to his experience."—Dr. John Gregory, (p. 737, supra.)

"Sydenham, the restorer of true physic."—Hume: Hist. of Eng., ch. lxxi.

"Sydenham first discovered that the cool regimen succeeded best in Small-pox. By this discovery he saved the lives of hundreds of thousands; and we revere his memory for it, though he never heard of inoculation."—Lord Macaulay: Edin. Rev., lxi. 285.

Let us not conclude even so brief a notice of the great physician without quoting his own declaration (in his chapter on the plague) of the principles which guided his professional career:

"If the reader should find that I have anywhere erred in theory, I beg his pardon; but as to practice, I declare I have faithfully related every thing, and that I never proposed any plan of cure before I had thoroughly tried it. Indeed, when I come to die, I trust I shall have a cheerful witness in my breast, that I have not only with the greatest diligence and honesty attempted the recovery of the health of all who committed themselves to my care, . . . but that also I have laboured to the utmost of my power, if by any means it might be, that the cure of diseases may be managed after I am dead with greater certainty; for I esteem any progress in that kind of knowledge (how small soever it be) . . . to be of more value than the vain pomp of nice speculations."

Dr. Samuel Johnson wrote in 1742 a Life of Sydenham, which was prefixed to Swan's edition of the Works of the latter, 1742, 2 vols. 8vo; also published in Lon. Gent. Mag., Dec. 1742, 633, and has been republished with Johnson's Lives of the English Poets. Johnson remarks that from his treatises may be collected

"that his skill in Physic was not his highest Excellence; that his whole Character was amiable; that his chief View was the Benefit of Mankind, and the chief Motive of his Actions the Will of God, whom he mentions with Reverence, well becoming the most enlightened and most penetrating mind. He was benevolent, candid, and communicative, sincere and religious; qualities which it were happy if they could copy from him who emulate his Knowledge and imitate his Methods."

Dr. John Brown, of Edinburgh, published in the North British Review for November, 1849, an essay on Locke and Sydenham, and this was republished in his Horæ Subsecivæ, Edin., p. 8vo, 1858; 2d ed., 1859. He also contributed a biographical notice of Sydenham to Encyc. Brit., 8th ed., xx., (1860.) There is a brief sketch of Sydenham in the Lives of the British Physicians, Lon., 18mo, 1830, (Fam. Lib., xiv.;) new ed., 1857.

The Soul's Errand (in consequence of an alteration of it published with his poems and translations, 1641, fol., ut infra) has often been ascribed to Sylvester. It is as the translator of Du Bartas's poems that he is best known: he published an English version of this poet's Canticle of the Victorie obteined by the French King Henrie the Fourth at Yvry, 1590, 4to; of his Triumph of Faith, &c., 1592, 4to; of his Second Weeke, 1598, 8vo; of his Miracle of the Peace in Fravnce, 1599, 4to; of his Deuine Weekes and Workes, 1598, 16mo, (ea. part with separate titlepage, dedication, &c.;) 2d ed., 1605, 4to, some l. p.; 3d ed., (1611,) 4to: Bibl. Anglo-Poet., 654, £1 1*s.*; 4th ed., (1613,) 4to. Three years after Sylvester's death appeared: 6. Du Bartas his Diuine Weekes and Workes, with a Compleate Collection of all the other most delight-full Workes translated and written by ye famous Philomusus Josvah Sylvester, Gent., 1621, fol.; 2d ed., 1633, fol.; 3d ed., 1644, fol.

"Both the version of Sylvester, and his original poems, published with it, are remarkable for their inequality: for great beauties and for glaring defects. His versification is sometimes exquisitely melodious, and was recognized as such by his contemporaries, who distinguished him by the appellation of 'silver-tongued Sylvester.'"—DR. DRAKE: Shaksp. and his Times, i. 653.

In his Literary Hours (3d ed., vol. iii., Nos. 49, 50, and 51) Drake comments on and quotes copiously from Sylvester's Du Bartas. Baxter, (Prefatory Address to his Poetical Fragments, 1681, sm. 8vo, reprinted 1821, 12mo,) after declaring that Quarles "outwent" George Wither, proceeds to declare, "Silvester, or Dubartas, seems to me to outdo them both."

By greater critics he is as greatly praised:

"And after thee gins Bartas hie to rayse
His heavenly muse the Almighty to adore."

"Bartas was some French angel girt with bays,
And thou a Bartas art in English Layes."

Not so enthusiastic is Mr. Hallam:

"The translation [of La Semaine] by Silvester has rendered it in some measure familiar to the readers of our old poetry; and attempts have been made, not without success, to show that Milton had been diligent in picking jewels from this mass of bad taste and bad writing."—*Lit.
